Special Officer William Morgan, of Decker's court, was given a hearing yesterday morning before Mayor Connell for stealing a pair of rubbers in the hotel of William Deckelnick on South Main avenue. Spoiling the Skating.

Some miscreant has stooped to mean, petty business in order to spoil the skating on this side of the river. The brick yard pond was in good condition until recently, when Scranton teameters began to dump ashes on the ice olling it. The boys noticed that it s a preconcerted plan to spoil the and the next driver that came ng was roughly treated. The Teamsters then desisted in their attempts to spoil the brick yard and attention was next turned to the Little Woods park, on Luzerne street. The boys had flooded several acres of land and the skating was good, until some over-industrious person cut it with an Then the boys flooded it again, and now the ice has been spoiled by the liberal use of salt.

Patrick Kennehan's Body Found in the Leggett's Creek.

SLID FROM THE ROADWAY

Was Unable to Help Himself and Died (While Partially Immersed in the Icy Water of the Creek-Inquest Will Be Held Tonight.

Partly submerged in the waters of Leggetts creek, about a mile above the city line and a little below Chinchilla. the dead body of Patrick Kennahan, a middle-aged widower, with three children, boarding with his sister, Mrs. Munley, on West Market street was discovered at daybreak yesterday morning by two farmers of Wallsville, n their way to Scranton with loads of produce.

At the point where the body was found the stream flows twelve feet below the roadway of the Abington turnpike. There is a bend in the road and teamsters driving along could eastly distinguish the body in the water. The stream is about a foot deep and is covered with a thin sheet of ice. The position of the body as it lay would ndicate that Kennahan had fallen feet foremost from the roadway above. He was a cripple, and wore a wooden leg, which went under the ice and left the upper part of the body exposed and resting on its right side. The head vas supported by the right arm, and all the circumstances led to believe that Kennahan had slid down into the stream while helpless, and died from exposure. Skirting the roadway to protect travelers from stumbling down he embankment is an inch and a half wire rope drawn lineally along, three feet above the ground. On the wire were bloodstains, and these conveyed the impresssion that foul play had something to do with the man's death. This was whispered through the North End and crowds of curiousity-seekers thronged to the lonesome

The Coroner Takes Charge.

The two farmers, on arriving at the North End police station, conveyed the news, and Patrolman Johler was detalled to go to the scene. He remained in charge of the body, which still lay as it had been found, until Coroner. Kelley arrived at 2 o'clock and empaneled the following jury: George E. Atherton, Patrolman John J. Johler, John Finnegan, Edward Neary, James Kelley, and John H. Moran.

The body was drawn out of the creek and the clothes were frozen stiff. Coroner Kelley made a complete examination of the corpse, but could find no indications of violence to warrant the assumption that the man had been murdered. Kennahan was employed in Storrs shaft, No. 3, which was idle Tuesday. He spent the day in drinking and about 7.30 that evening he left what is known as the Temperance House in the company of a friend named Richard Warren. This resort is only a short way from where the body was found. John T. Boyce, proprietor of the Chinchilla hotel, said he saw two men standing in the roadway late Tuesday night, but he was not sure if Kennahan was one of

The time allowed by law has expired wherein a citizen could file his nomination papers and there have been no certificates of nomination or nomination papers filed with the county commissioners by the Republicans of the Eleventh ward for any office at all in the ward.

Additional Electric Lights.

Pedestrians passing along Pittston 100,000 Barrels per Annum avenue in the Twentieth ward, will in future have something to be thankful for in the fact that their footsteps will be guided by the help of two additional electric lights. One of the poles is in a much-needed spot, and was lighted ast night for the first time. The workmen finished their labor upon it late yesterday afternoon. Today they will give their attention to the erection of a pole at Pittston avenue and Gibbons street, and tonight probably, the beams from a lamp at that point will welcome the traveler. Both lights were very badly needed.
