Settled Out of Court.

BY MRS. ALEXANDER.

(These short serial stories are copyrighted by Bachelier, Johnson & Bachelier, and are printed in The Tribune by special arrangement, simultaneous with their appearance in the leading daily journals of the large cities.)

The light of a fine evening in April was fading as the Dover boat rushed into Charing Cross station, and an army of porters boarded the luggage vans and opened the carriage doors.

From a first-class compartment stepped a young man of twenty-two or twenty-three, above middle height and well set up. He wore a brown tweed suit and brown boots. He had also a bronzed complexion, handsome, good-humored, bold brown eyes; brown, wavy hair and long mustaches, a shade or two lighter; in short, he was brown all over. He turned to the carriage and assisted a lady to alight, a small, slight girl, who looked little more than seventeen when she smiled or spoke. Her cheeks were pale, but her lips were ripe and rosy, while her dark, delicate eyebrows and lashes contrasted with her fair, reddish hair and deep blue, nearly black, eyes, big and lustrous.

She was dressed in black—very well dressed in the sense of freshness and becomingness—but not richly.

"Are your friends here to meet you?" asked the gentleman, taking a neat leather bag from the carriage and holding it for her, while he directed the porter to carry his valise and heavy overcoat.

"I expect a lady to meet me, but I have never seen her," returned the girl with a smile. "So I feel a little puzzled," her accent was foreign but her English was fluent.

"Oh, I can get you a cab when you have cleared your baggage—only you'll feel rather blue, being all alone in this wilderness on your first visit, too! I can see you to your destination if you like. I am quite disengaged!"

"You are very, very good, but I am not at all timid."

Here a tall woman, in a fur-lined cloak and black velvet bonnet drawn tightly over an exceedingly aquiline nose, came up at a quick pace. "Oh! are you Miss Cavallo?" she exclaimed breathlessly.

"I am" was the quick reply.

"Thank God, I was so afraid I should be late! The buses are so full just about this time of day—people going to theaters and concerts and what not! And I kept worrying and worrying about you—poor dear! to be left by yourself all alone in this great stony station! Come along—and see to your luggage—you'll be glad to get to the end of your journey and to rest."

The lady spoke with great volubility—and with the true London twang.

"This is your bag? I'll take charge of it, sir," she continued, with a suspicious glance at her young friend's traveling companion.

"Good evening," said Miss Cavallo, holding out her hand, with some slight hesitation. "I shall always remember your courtesy with pleasure." There was a quiet, natural dignity in her voice and manner.

"I hope to see you again!" exclaimed the brown gentleman, eagerly.

"You are very good, but for the present it is adieu."

"No! Au revoir!" he returned, lifting his hat with an air of great deference. He followed them into the room where the custom house officers examine the baggage, and there exchanged a few words with his fellow-traveler, whose box was looked at before his. Again they said good-bye and she walked away.

"Anyhow I know her address," he said to himself, as he unlocked his portmanteau for inspection—this was soon accomplished. As he turned to leave, he trod on something soft, and, looking down, saw a black lace scarf which he recognized as one which his fellow traveler had fastened on her neck and hung on her arm while in the train. He picked it up. "She's off by this time. I must send it—or take it to her"—he thought with a smile as he rolled it up and thrust it into his pocket, then he jumped into a cab and drove to his hotel.

Here he was evidently expected. He asked if dinner had been ordered, and if Mr. Dixon was waiting for him. Hearing he had not come yet, he retired to his room, from which he issued half an hour later, spick and span, freshened and brushed up, a soldierly, good-looking fellow, though not what could be called a handsome man. Dinner was laid in a private room, where before the fire stood a gentleman—a short, slight, light-colored man, clean-shaven, with sharp gray eyes and an interrogative mouth. As the traveler entered he exclaimed: "Ha! Forrester, I am heartily glad to see you!" and they shook hands with great cordiality.

"How long is it since we met?" asked Forrester.

"Nearly seven years, I think! and you have been roasting—for most of them—in some of the worst parts of India! Yet you scarcely look a day older, while Soudan has written itself in wrinkles and crowfeet on my prematurely aged countenance and dimmed the fire of my eyes!"

"They look devilish good still, my dear fellow, and you seem in excellent case, while I suppose you have been heaping up riches—"

"But cannot tell you shall gather them," interrupted Dixon, with a laugh. "For I begin to fear I am a confirmed bachelor."

"Oh, pooh! you are too young to talk like that. You are not so much older than I am."

"Five years in time, ten in nature," Here the waiter brought in dinner, and during their repast the two friends business, and he was most confidential with my poor father."

They continued to talk on this subject, their conversation showing that Forrester was captain in a regiment of Bengal lancers, and not troubled with too much of this world's goods; that his grand-uncle, brother of his maternal grandmother, was a miserly personage who had amassed a large fortune. He had few relatives, and Cecil Forrester was his nearest of kin. Dixon, his guest, and man of business, was one of his earliest friends. They had been to school together. Dixon's father had been trustee and confidential adviser to Forrester's mother, and the management of the family affairs seemed to belong of right to the firm of Dixon & Phelps, Lincoln's Inn.

"I could hardly believe my eyes," said Forrester, pushing the bottle toward his guest. "When Treedy's letter came giving me the news of old Selwyn's death without a will, I did not know whether I was on my head or my heels. By Jove! I didn't lose much time in getting leave and telling the other fellows there would be a move in the regiment, for, of course, I'll send in my papers. Then I explained matters to the money-lenders that had their claws in me."

"I earnestly hope you are not heavily encumbered," said Dixon.

"A mere featherweight now, my dear fellow, but a crushing load that was forcing me down to ruin three months ago. I've been an awful fool, Dixon, but I shall be a rock of sense in future. Lord! how easily it is to be wise and prudent and high-minded when your pocket is well lined. By the way, you must let me have some money, Dick, and settle with my creditors, as soon as possible!"

Dixon paused before replying.

"You shall have some, of course," he said, "but I must warn you to be prudent for a claimant sprung up to dispute your inheritance. I fancy it is a mere attempt to extort money, but it will cost you something to defend yourself, so you had better hold your hand till all preliminaries are settled."

"Why! who can dispute my claim?" cried Forrester, impatiently.

"It was a great surprise to me, I assure you, to receive a letter from Welford & Son—they are solicitors in Parliament street—stating that they were instructed to enforce the claim of their client, the daughter of the late George Selwyn, younger brother of our client deceased, who was his nearest of kin."

"But George Selwyn never married!" cried Forrester.

"No one knew if he did! and I do not believe it," returned Dixon. "He was a Bohemian, and rather a bad lot. He was years younger than your grand-uncle, who used to send him money from time to time. He died some years ago."

"Then you do not think there is much to fear from this claim?"

"No; but it may give us trouble! However, it is a warning not to be too secure, nor too lavish in your expenditure."

"Why? What the devil do you mean, Dixon? At the worst, this strange claimant would only divide the spoils with me, and the plum old Selwyn has left behind him will stand two bites, eh?"

"Well, no! If George Selwyn's daughter is legitimate she would take the whole; she is, therefore, you are only the grand-nephew."

"What an infernal shame! How disgracefully unjust the law is," cried Forrester, with an angry light in his eyes.

"It generally seems so, to those it does not favor," returned Dixon dryly. "But I think it may puzzle Welford & Son to make out a case. We'll see."
