The store at present occupied by J. Lawrence Stelle, Music Dealer, and propose to enter our new premises with a brand new stock in every detail. In order to effect this desired end, we begin today a

GREAT THIRTY-DAY CLEARING SALE

Of our entire stock. No need to say anything about quality. The goods we offer were not bought for cheap sale purposes, and therefore carry our guarantee just the same as if they had been bought in the regular way and at regular prices. Thirty days is a very short time in which to close out such a large stock as we carry; but we'll set the pace for rapid selling by quoting prices that in many cases would surprise the manufacturers who sold them to us. But figures outweigh talk in such an important occasion, and we ask your attention to the following, as an example of what we are doing throughout the entire stock:

China and Porcelain.

Prettily Decorated Tea Sets, 56 pieces, good ware.....	$2.98
A 100-piece Dinner Set, nicely decorated and very attractive.....	5.90
China Dinner Set, 102 pieces, fine ware, richly decorated, up to date in style.....	19.50
6-piece Decorated Toilet Set, good ware, full size.....	1.79
10-piece Toilet Set, handsomely decorated, and of good quality.....	2.24

The bargain story would just be as interesting supposing we went through every item in these great departments.

Lamps, Cutlery, Etc.

Banquet Lamps, very handsome, central draft burners, rich silk and lace shades, etc.....	$ 2.75
Decorated Vase Lamps, shade to match, and a good burner.....	74c
Rogers' Triple Plated Knives or Forks, positively the very best goods; latest designs, per dozen,	2.98

Our Lamp stock embraces every desirable make and size known to the trade, and there is not an item in it that has not shared equally in the general mark down.

Glassware, Etc.

Light Blown Tumblers, engraved 8 lines; not seconds, but perfect goods.....	40c. per doz
Glass Tea Sets, four pieces, comprising Sugar Bowl, Spoon Holder, Butter Dish and Cream Jug.....	19c

CHAPTER II.

"You said yourself once that you would tackle any subject if you were allowed half an hour to read it up."

"Certainly, but this is the one subject that you can't read up. You can't get it out of a book, because any book upon the subject would be out of date before it could be published."

"Can't you get it out of other papers?"

"Even then you can't be certain of being up to date. I tell you—and you can believe it or not, as you like—that the shape of a sleeve has been known to change completely in a single night. Of course, the other papers would give me the right vocabulary—words like 'savidge' and 'ruching,' and things of that kind."

"Yes. They wouldn't tell you what they mean."

"No. There you are again; and the thing is too difficult."

"Look here," I said, "you must know some good-natured woman of the world—one of the kind that likes young men—one of the kind that believes that journalism is connected with authority, and that authority is connected with romance. You had better go to her, tell her frankly what your position is, and ask her—"

He interrupted me. "You are being perfectly useless to me," he said, with clenched teeth and studied calm. "If I know you at all, you must know that I would sooner be boiled alive in non-corrosive ink and have my blue-black carcass eaten by half-caste Kafirs, than let any woman of my acquaintance know that I had been even asked to do anything so presumptuous and immodest. If I attempt this article at all, it will be to prove to the editor that I really am an all-around journalist, and you must understand that I don't want it talked about."

"Certainly. But if you're going to write the article, how do you propose to get your information?"

"I can't say exactly. I shall look in the windows of the big shops, and take into the windows of a big shop in Regent street where they sold bonnets. As for his appearance, I can only say that he looked like a desperate man. "I am glad to see you," he said, gloomily. "If you'd come a minute later, it would have been all over. I should have broken that window, thrown the bonnets and things into the street and trampled on them. I have been thinking about doing it for the last five minutes."

"Look here, Salemaker," I said, "you've been overworking yourself. You wouldn't get yourself into this condition if you didn't take things so seriously."

"I'll give you a sovereign," he replied. "To atone your foot through that window. Go on, do it. Nobody's looking."

"Because she had paid her penny and couldn't bring herself to take less than the full pennyworth. Women mostly like value for their money. I had counted on that. As I say, I had got clear off, but I believe the incident spoiled my nerve. After that I had no intention of going anywhere in front of another big shop window in Oxford street. I pulled myself together. I decided to go in, say that I wanted the latest news about the fashions and offer in return for the information a gratuitous advertisement of the firm. Well, I went in. Inside there was a tall stately man. He smiled at me just as if he wanted to be a friend to me, and yet all the time his stolidness seemed to be a kind of bar between us."

"Here Salemaker paused and buried his head in his hands."

pulled out my note-book, and it was just then I saw her with her green eyes fixed on me."

"What her?"

"Miss Catling. Didn't I mention it? I believe she must have been lying in ambush there. She saw, of course, what I was doing, saw it at a glance. I was doing her work. She just bowed, and came at me like an angry cow. I took off my hat and walked quickly away. She pursued. I quickened my pace, and got on to an omnibus. She got on to another omnibus immediately behind it. I waited a few seconds, and then stepped off my bus. So I got clear away."

"But how? When she saw you get off the one bus, why didn't she get off the other, if she wanted to catch you?"

"Because she had paid her penny and couldn't bring herself to take less than the full pennyworth. Women mostly like value for their money. I had counted on that. As I say, I had got clear off, but I believe the incident spoiled my nerve. After that I had no intention of going anywhere in front of another big shop window in Oxford street. I pulled myself together. I decided to go in, say that I wanted the latest news about the fashions and offer in return for the information a gratuitous advertisement of the firm. Well, I went in. Inside there was a tall stately man. He smiled at me just as if he wanted to be a friend to me, and yet all the time his stolidness seemed to be a kind of bar between us."

"I can't do it myself, because it would injure the paper if I got into the police courts. You've got no position to speak of, and it wouldn't matter if you did it. If you don't want the sovereign, do it out of friendship. There's a hat at the back trimmed with two shoe buckles and a split hummingbird. If I could tear that in half and throw it under an omnibus I should feel better."

"Control yourself," I said, firmly. "I'm going to take you to the club, and give you tea, and so far as it is humanly possible, stop you from behaving like a lunatic. What have you been doing all day?"

"I have been collecting material for an article entitled: 'The Height of Fashion.' That's what has brought me to this. You won't do this little thing to oblige me. Just what I thought you call yourself a Bohemian, and as a matter of fact you're eaten up with respectability."

"With some difficulty I persuaded him to come with me to the club. There I gave him tea and consolatory cigarettes. When at last a half-past twelve struck, I told him my experiences. He did so, with some reluctance.

"I began," he said, "by going to Bond street. I found a window there with just the right kind of clothes in it. They were so ugly as to be almost indecent. That was why I knew they were all right; they couldn't have been exhibited at all if they hadn't had style. They must have been simply saturated with style. Besides, Bond street's always all right, anyhow. So I

A GREAT MEDICINE.

Cod-liver Oil is useful beyond any praise it has ever won, and yet few are willing or can take it in its natural state. Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil is not offensive; it is almost palatable.

Children like it. It is Cod-liver Oil made more effectual, and combined with the Hypophosphites its strengthening and flesh-forming powers are largely increased.

Don't be persuaded to accept a substitute!

notes of the people in the Park. Then the managers of the shops would tell me something in return for a gratuitous advertisement. I thought, perhaps, you might have some other notion."

"No," I said, "I'm afraid I am not of much use. However, I can say that I am sincerely sorry for you."

He shook my hand warmly on leaving, and thanked me. "If anything should happen," he said, hopefully, "it will, at any rate, be a consolation to me that I have had your sympathy. Good night." He had no sooner shut the door behind him than he opened it again and put his head in. "You don't happen to know what a baquet is, do you?" he asked in a melancholy voice.

"No? Well, it doesn't matter. It's only one thing out of many. Good night again." He looked very depressed, as if he had some presentiment that he had undertaken a task beyond his powers, and evil would come of it.

Three times on the following day I saw Salemaker. The first time was in the morning, outside the law courts. He was walking very fast in the direction of the west, and seemed more energetic than on the previous day. He came up to me, and said at once in rather a peremptory way: "What's a record platting?"

"I confessed that I didn't know."

"That's just like you," he said, impatiently. "You never do know anything. I can't stop."

He hurried on. I noticed that he was carrying under his arm two or three of the feminine journals.

Later in the day I found him staring
