CHAPTER V.

The day of the trial arrived in May. Daryl and I had arranged our plan carefully. We were to let the prosecution sail along with only a perfunctory show of objections and the most careless of cross-examinations and walt for Mrs. Prineveau to get on the stand. Daryl kept out of court, and the state had everything its own way. The killing was shown, the post-mortem gone over and the bullet and pistol shown and identified, and the ownership established. I let each witness go by without an attempt to confuse or invalidate his testimony, and only crossexamined the girl, Rosy, in accordance with Daryl's suggestion.

"One moment, Miss Kenny," I said as she was leaving the stand. "You have testified that Mrs. Prineveau alone assisted Mr. Prineveau to dress for the ride?"

Rosy-"Yes, sir; she always helped him to dress.' "When you came into the room was

"O, yes, sir. She called back to me on the stairs and told me to keep her door locked, as there were strange men working on the roof."

What were they doing there?"

"Fixin' the tin." 'How many of them?"

Two or three, I guess." That will do, Miss Kenny."

So transparently puerile and nude of any mark was all this to John Greve that he came to me at recess and in his large patronizing way said, as he laid his hand on my shoulder;

'Harry, my dear fellow, you'll have to get up some steam and make a show of earning your retainer. By Jove, I recommended you!"

Daryt on the other hand was in the best of humor when we met in my study.

"Capital, capital," said he, "Couldn't be better. The two or three men on the roof is a surprise. The evening papers are playing into our hands beau-

"One of them says: 'The counsel for the defense had to be waked up at study intervals and asked to say a few words and then went to sleep again.' That's a godsend. If Mrs. Prineveau is not a godsend. dor, John Daryl came in through the crowd and sat down at my side. I was watching her closely, and saw plainly enough the muscles of her mouth twitch and her glance turn involuntarily toward John Greve for reassurance But neither John Greve nor anybody else but myself saw anything.

Her testimony, given in a clear, direct manner and with the low, soft time of this court cannot be taken up convincing tones of a lady, was merely corroborative of what we already knew. She was carried over the facts and restated then.

When the examination, without a single exception on my part, had been concluded, I began the cross-examina-

"Madame, was it not your husband's silver watch by which you saw the time when you put it in his waistcoat pocket, to be worn over that spot where the bullet hole was made?"

Here the prosecuting attorneys were all on their feet, of course, shouting exceptions. But I kept my eye on the witness. I knew that there was a profound sensation in the court room. I could feel it against my back like a magnetic wave. But I nver took my eyes off the woman.

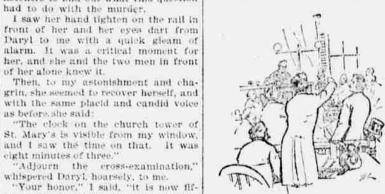

"Your honor," I said, without turning my head toward the bench, "this is a question of life or death to an innocent man. His fate lies in the answers of this witness. She has deliberately lied in saying that she saw the time from a church clock; and sne did it to conceal something. It will save the state and my learned friends a great deal of futile labor to permit the crossexamination to go on now."

"If the counsel will frame his questions to full within the evidence there can be no objection," said the judge. "Madame, your husband carried a watch"

She bowed her head. "Did he buy that watch or did you?" "I may have done so. I have made many purchases for him." "Can you produce that watch?"

Mr. C. W. Campbell—Dear Sir: I have given my boy, Freddie, 7 years old, some of Dr. Campbell's Magic Worm Sugar and Tea, and to my surprise this afternoon about 2 o'clock he passed a tapeworm measuring about 35 feet in length, head and all. I have it in a bottle and any person wishing to see it can d. so by calling at my store. I had tried numerous other remedies recommended for taking tapeworms, but all failed. In my estimation Dr. Campbell's is the greatest worm remedy in existence.
