charmed to find an adventure through

This beautiful youth with his starry eyes, soft with admiration, who had brought her back the opals, looked like a knight out of fairyland. She was young; she was weary of the seclusion of her widowhood; she was kept in close constraint by those who had authority over her; she was ready to reenter life in its enjoyments, its amuse-ments, its affections, its desires. The tragic end of her husband had impressed and saddened her, but she had recovered from its shock. The marriage had been arranged by their respective families, and the hearts of neither had been consulted. Laranigra, however, had become much in love with her and had left her all which it was in his power to leave, and that had

People passing on the Sh canal stopped their gondolas under the it round her throat; some tendrils of balcony to listen; some Venetian pro-fessional musicians in a boat applauded. namer sat in the shadow and listened, and looked at them. Music said little nothing to him; he had scarcely any comprehension of it; but something in the sound of those blended voices touched a chord in his nature-made him feel vaguely sad, restlessiy desirous, foolishly irritated. The light fell on the handsome head of Andreis, on the carnations at the lady's throat on the rings on their hands which touched as they took the mandolin one from the other; behind them was the open casement, the balcony with its white spiraea; the lighted frontage of a palace on the opposite side of the canal. As they ceased to sing the people below on the water applauded again, and cried: "Brava! brava!

"Prince Andreis is a poet," said Damer, with a harsh tone in his voice. "Who never wrote a verse," said Andreis, as he handed a cup of coffee to his hostess.

Through the closed windows the sounds of a chorus sung by the strolling singers below came faintly and muffled into the room; the lamplight shone on the white spray of the spiraea, which looked like a crystal of snow.

"If I had found the opals I should have been inspired by them," he added. "As it is, I am dumb and unhappy.

Veronica Laranigra smiled. "If you are dumb, so was Orpheus." "And if you are unhappy," added Damer, "you are only so out of wantonness because the gods have given you too many gifts." "Or because he has stolen a piece of spiraea," said Veronica.

"I may keep my theft?" asked An-

"Yes, For you brought back the epals, though you did not find them." Soon after they took their leave of her and went down to the waiting gondola. The beatload of musicians had drifted upward toward Rialto, the colors of their paper lanthorns glowing through the dark. There was no They did not speak to each other in the few minutes which carried them to their hotel. When they reached it they parted with a brief good night. Neither asked the other what his impressions of the evening had been.

When the young Sicilian prince, Lionello Andreis, head of an ancient Hispano Italian family, had met with a hunting accident and the tusks of an old boar had brought him near to death. an English surgeon, by name Frederic Damer, who was then in Palmermo, did for him what none of the Italian sur-

A year had passed since then; the splendid vitality f the Sicilian had returned to all its natural vigor; he was only 24 years of age and naturally strong as a young oak in the woods of Etna. But he had a mother who loved him, and was anxious; she begged the Englishman to remain awhile near him; the Sicilian laughed but submitted; he and Damer had traveled together during several months, and were about in another month to part company; the Sicilian to return to his own people, the Englishman to occupy a chair of physiology in a town of northern Europe. Their lives

Torcello and the shape of their fate was altered .. Damer was the son of a country physician, but his father had been poor, the family numerous, and he, a third son, had been sent out into the world with only his education as his capital. He practiced surgery to live; he practiced physiology to reach through it that power and celebrity for which his nature craved and his mental capacity fitted him. But at every step his nar-row means galled and fretted him, and he had been a demonstrator, an assistshoulders and fell to her feet like the ant, a professor in schools, when his vast ability and relentless will fitted him for the position of a Helmholtz or a Virchow in that new priesthood which had arisen to claim the rule of man-

Andreis and the whole of his family had shown him the utmost gratitude, liberality and consideration, and the young prince bore from him good-humoredly sareasms and satires which he would not have sufered from an emperor; but Damer in ils turn felt for the Sicilian and his people nothing but the contempt of the that he loved her, but she prevented creat intellect for the uncultured mind, the irritation of the wise man who sees a child gayly making a kite to divert Itself out of the parchments of a treatise in an unknown tongue which, studied, might have yielded up to the student the secret of perished creeds and of lost nations. There is no pride so arrogant, no supremacy so unbending, as those of the intellect. It may stand, like Relisarius, a beggar at the gate but, like Belisarius, it deems itself the superior of all the crowds who drop their alms to it, and while it stretches out its hand to them its lips curse them.

Mutual love was sweet, but it was not freedom. And what she felt ashamed of was a certain reluctance which she felt to allow Damer to see or know that ing but his physical beauty and his gay, glad temper and kind heart.

"Do you want nothing more than these?" the gaze of Damer seemed in her imagination to say to her. Andreis was delightful to her; his beauty, his gayety, and his homage were all sympathetic to her. She knew him telling her so; she liked her lately acquired liberty; she did not want a declaration which would force her to decide in one way or another what to do with her future. And she was affected without being aware of it by the scarcely disguised contempt which his companion had for him. It was seldom outspoken, but it was visible in every word of Damer, in every glance,

"He is beautiful, yes," he said once to "So is an animal." "Do you like animals?"

She looked at him under her long silky lashes as a child looks at what it fears in the dusk of a fading day. He attracted her and repelled her, as when she had herself been a child she had been at once charmed and frightened by the great ghostly figures on the warmer. Too many homes bear this fear-inspiring placard, denoting the prevalence of that most insidious and dreaded of all diseases - Diphtheria.

It is to-day a recognized fact among the best practitioners that nine out of ten cases formerly considered hopeless may be brought to a happy termination by the use of that great original raw food product, Bovinine.

This great blood-generating, life-maintaining, strength-developing, and fleshproducing product of lean, raw meat, contains the greatest amount of lifepreserving qualities in the least possible bulk of any preparation known

In cases of Diphtheria, Bovinine has special advantages. In this disease, as in others, the rapidity with which it is assimilated gives to it a preference over all other foods, passing, as it does, into the system immediately, without causing the digestive organs to perform any labor. And considering the fact that the lesions in the throat prevent the swallowing of solid food, it becomes an absolute neces sity. In the worst cases, where even liquids cannot be taken by the mouth, Bovinine by being used as an injection. Above all, Bovinine is in itself a germicide, and in all such diseases as Diphtheria, caused by microbes, it not only performs its greatest mission of maintaining life, but antidotes the existing bacilli.

Bovinine has done wonders in thousands of cases of Diphtheria. When your doctor uses it you may cease to worry, and be assured of a speedy recovery.
