THE EXPLOITS OF BRIGADIER GERARD

How the Brigadier held the King. By A. Conan Doyle.

CHAPTER V. Finally he began to speak of what the English call sport, and he told such stories of the money which he had lost over which two cocks could kill the other, or which of two men could strike the other the most in a fight for a prize, that I was filled with astonishment. He was ready to bet upon anything in the most wonderful manner, and when I chanced to see a shooting star he was anxious to bet that he would see more than me, twenty-five francs a star, and it was only when I explained that my purse was in the hands of the brigands that he would give over the idea.

Well, we chatted away in this very amiable fashion until the day began to break, when suddenly we heard a great volley of musketry from somewhere in the front of us. It was very broken and broken ground, and I thought, although I could see nothing, that a general engagement had broken out. The Bart laughed at my idea, however, and explained that the sound came from the English camp, where every man emptied his piece each morning so as to make sure of having a dry priming.

"In another mile we shall be up with the outposts," said he. I glanced around at this and I perceived that we had trotted along at so good a pace during the time that we were keeping up our pleasant chat that the dragon with the lame horse was altogether out of sight. I looked on every side, but in the whole of that vast rocky valley there was no one save only the Bart and I--both of us armed, you understand, and both of us well mounted. I began to ask myself whether after all it was quite necessary that I should ride that mile which would bring me to the British outposts. Now I wish to be clear with you

"Two can play at that game, my dear Bart," said I. "Then we'll see who can play it best," he cried, pulling out his sword. "I had drawn mine also, but I was quite determined not to hurt this admirable young man who had been my benefactor."

I Was Determined Not to Hurt This Young Man.

own against the best blade in the six light cavalry brigades. His answer was a cut at my head. I parried and shore off half of his white plume. He thrust at my breast. I turned his point and cut away the other half of his cockade.

"Curse your monkey tricks!" he cried as I wheeled my horse away from him. "Why should you strike at me?" said I. "You see that I will not strike back."

"That's all very well," said he. "But you've got to come with me to the camp."

"I'll never see the camp," said I. "I'll lay you nine to four you do," he cried, as he made at me, sword in hand. But those words of his put something new into my head. Could we not decide the matter in some better way than by fighting? The Bart was placing me in such a position that I should have to hurt him, or he would certainly hurt me. I avoided his rush, though his word point was within an inch of my neck. "I have a proposal," I cried. "We shall throw dice as to which is the prisoner of the other."

"Nor I, but I have cards," "Cards let it be," said I. "And the game?" "I leave it to you." "Ecarte, then--the best of three." I could not help smiling as I agreed for I do not suppose that there were three men in France who were my masters at the game. I told the Bart as much as was dismounted. He smiled also as he listened.

"I was counted the best player at Waters," said he. "With even luck you deserve to get off if you beat me." So we tethered our two horses and sat down, one on either side of the great flat rock. The Bart took a pack of cards out of his tunic and I had only to see him shuffle them to convince me that I had no novice to deal with. We cut and the deal fell to him.

My faith, it was a stake worth playing for. He wished to add a hundred gold pieces a game, but what was money when the fate of Colonel Etienne Gerard hung upon the cards? I felt as though all those who had reason to be interested in the game, my mother, my hussars, the Sixth corps d'armee, Ney, Massena, even the emperor himself, were forming a ring around us in that desolate valley. Heavens, what a blow to one and all of them should the cards go against me. But I was confident, for my earlate play was as famous as my swordsmanship, and, save old Bouvet, of the hussars, who won seventy-six out of 150 games off me, I have always had the best of a series.

TO OUR PATRONS:

Washburn-Crosby Co. wish to assure their many patrons that they will this year hold to their usual custom of milling STRICTLY OLD WHEAT until the new crop is fully cured. New wheat is now upon the market, and owing to the excessively dry weather many millers are of the opinion that it is already cured, and in proper condition for milling. Washburn-Crosby Co. will take no risks, and will allow the new wheat fully three months to mature before grinding. This careful attention to every detail of milling has placed Washburn-Crosby Co.'s flour far above other brands.
