THE CHRONICLES OF MARTIN HEWITT THE CASE OF THE MISSING HAND

(These short serial stories are copyrighted by Bachelier, Johnson & Bachelier, and are printed in The Tribune by special arrangement, simultaneous with their appearance in the leading daily journals of the large cities.)

CHAPTER V.

I suppose I may have somehow betrayed my amazement and horror to my companion's sharp eyes, for, suddenly, I felt his hand tightly grip my arm just above the elbow. I turned and found his face close by mine and his finger raised warningly. Then I saw him produce his wrist-clip and make a motion with his palm towards his mouth, which I understood to be intended to remind me of the gag. We stepped forward.

The man turned his horrible cracking over and over above the crackling sticks, as though to smoke and dry it in every part. I saw Hewitt's hand reach out toward him, and in a flash I had pulled him back over his heels and I had driven the gag between his teeth as he opened his mouth. We seized his wrists in the cords at once, and I shall never forget the man's look of ghastly, frantic terror as he lay on the ground. When I knew more I understood the reason of this.

Hewitt took both wrists held in one hand and drove the gag entirely into the man's mouth, so that he almost choked. A piece of sackling lay near the fire, and by Hewitt's request I dropped that awful hand from the wooden tongs upon it and rolled it up in a parcel—it was, no doubt, what the sackling had been brought for. Then we lifted the man to his feet and hurried him in the direction of the cart.

The whole capture could not have occupied thirty seconds, and, as I stumbled over the rough field at the man's left elbow, I could only think of the thing as one thinks of a dream that one knows all the time is a dream. But presently the man, who had been walking quietly, though gasping, sniffing and choking because of the tightly-rolled handkerchief in his mouth—presently he made a sudden dive, thinking doubtless to get his wrists free by surprise. But Hewitt was alert, and gave his wrists a twist that made him roll his head with a dismal, stifled yell and with the opening of his mouth, by some chance, the gag fell away. Immediately the man roared aloud for help.

"Quick," said Hewitt, "drag him along—they'll hear in the vans. Bring the hand!" I seized the fallen handkerchief and crammed it over the man's mouth as well as I might and together we made as much of a trot as we could, dragging the man between us, while Hewitt checked any reluctance on his part by a timely wrench of the wrist-holds. It was a hard two hundred and fifty yards to the luns, even for us—for the gypsy must have been a bad minute and a half indeed. Once more as we went over the uneven ground he managed to get a shout, and we thought we heard a distant reply from somewhere in the direction of the encampment. We pulled him over a stile in a tangle and dragged and pushed him through a small hedge gap in a heap. Here we were but twenty yards from the cart, and into that we flung him without wasting time or tenderness, to the intense consternation of the driver, who, I believe, very nearly set up a cry for help on his own account. Once in the cart, however, I seized the reins and the whip myself, and leaving Hewitt to take care of the prisoner, put the turn-out along toward Ratherby at as near two miles an hour as it could go. We made first for Mr. Hardwick's, but he, we found was with my uncle, so we followed him. The arrest of the Fosters had been effected, we learned, not very long after we had left the wood, as they returned, by another route to Ranworth. We brought our prisoner into the colonel's library, where he and Mrs. Hardwick were sitting. "I'm not quite sure what we can charge him with, unless it's anatomical robbery," Hewitt remarked, "but here's the criminal."

stinctively adopts in talking to a foreigner Keckeno jiny. "The man understood and shook his head, but not another word would he say or another question answer. "He's a foreign gypsy," Hewitt explained, "just as I thought—a Wallachian, in fact. 'Theirs is an older and purer dialect than that of the English gypsies, and only some of the root words are alike. But I think we can make him explain tomorrow that the Fosters, at least, had nothing to do with, at any rate, cutting off Sneathy's hand. Here it is, I think," and he gingerly lifted the folds of sackling from the ghastly object as it lay on the table, and then covered it again. "But what—what does this mean?" Mr. Hardwick said, in bewildered astonishment. "Do you mean this man is an accomplice?"

"Not at all—the case was one of suicide, as I think you'll agree when I've explained. This man simply found the body hanging and stole the hand."

dried over the smoke of certain wood and herbs, and then provided with wicks at each finger made of the dead man's hair, becomes, when lighted at each wick (the wicks are greased, of course), a charm whereby a thief may walk without hindrance where he pleases in a strange house, push open all doors and take what he likes. Nobody can stop him, for everybody the Hand of Glory approaches is made helpless, and can neither move nor speak. You may remember there was some talk of thieves' candles in connection with the horrible series of Whitechapel murders not long ago. That is only one form of the cult of the Hand of Glory."

"Yes," my uncle said, "I remember reading so. There's no story about it in the 'Ingoltsby Legends,' too, I believe. "There is—it is called 'The Hand of Glory.' In fact, you remember the spell: 'Open lock to the dead man's knock, and so on. But I think you'd better have the constable get this man into safe quarters for the night. He should be searched, of course. I expect they will find on him the hair I noticed to have been cut from Sneathy's head."

The village constable arrived with his iron handcuffs in substitution for those of cord which had so noisily vexed the wrists of our prisoner, and marched him away to the little lockup on the green. [To be Continued.]
