If you see a man walking about this morning with legs as stiff as base ball bats and a weary kink in his back you may know that he attended the Ladles' Ald society supper last night and foundered himself eating. Such a spread as they laid out-biscuits, salads, stuffed eggs, cold meats, cake, coffee and other etceteras-is enough to make any man brave the terrors of dyspepsia, even though he knew he would suffer a month afterward. The supper was a success and the society cleared a nice little sum. A horse of Alvin Day, editor of the Democrat, ran away yesterday evening about 6.30 o'clock, throwing out Mr. and Mrs. Day, and demolishing the buggy. No one seriously injured.
