Damage by Storm

Sunday's storm did some damage on this side. A barn in the rear of the house of George Weitzel, on Frink street, was an object of the lighning's attack. The slippery fluid entered at the eaves, ripped along the rafters, and after killing several chickens and smiting a pig, it lit with stunning force or the forehead of a horse. The animal fell and was unconscious for several hours It may finally recover. The barn was damaged to a great extent. A family named Jones on western Jackson street, near the railroad, was within few seconds of death. The father, returning home during the storm, saw his infant child sitting innocently in a doorway, which was open, forming a direct draft with a rear door. Mr Jones hastily grasped the child, re marking at its danger, and removed it to another part of the house, a few seconds afterward, a bolt of lightning entered the rear door and rushed through the hall, ripping off a part of the front door, where the child sat a few moments before. The dwellinghouse of Andrew Lance, on Jackson W. J. Evans returned home from street, was visited and badly damaged. Other houses were also attacked.
