He and of rocks by storm appears to have visited only those portions and ages. All that is beautiful seems of the county where, as yet, the county detective is least known, and he is reported to have collected considerable money by this means of extortion. It seems strange that he should have been so successful, when Mr. Leyshon's reputation as a faithful officer and as one who would not, under any circumstances, stoop to the low and criminal practice of extortion, is so well known in this county. For this reason I had supposed that it would be impossible for any individual to personate the present county detective for such a ase and ignoble purpose. Extortion, or as it is known in the parlance of the street, "bleeding," is a miserable crime and guage was not choice, but it was emshould be promptly and severely punished. phatic, and made American travelers who will furnish sufficient evidence to convict said unknown person, or any other person, who shall have personated the county detective and succeeded in securing money by means of extortion.
