Tam a young man, but I hope I have some of the virtues of an older one. However confounded by the turn thus given to my suspicions, I did not allow myself to be swerved from the path which my judgment had laid out for me. Finding it to be not far from the Simmons, and correctly judging that he would bring some such man with him as a constable, I only waited for their coming to institute a rigid search of this place. I had told the two gentlemen at their first appearance that this was done with the owners' permission and even at their entreaty; and seeing the calmness of Miss Knollys, the stolid indifference of the brother, who seemed to take the whole affair as a matter of course, and Lucetta's spirrited but by no means repellant bearing, they accepted my assurance and went cheerfully, though not carelessly, about their work. Mr. Simmons alone stopped to whisper once in my ear as we went down the tunnel-shaped hall through which Miss Grant had fled on that fatal night: "But what about the grave in the woods and the body that pered back: "One grave is not enough for us to find: if we come across no more that one can be easily explained."

I waited for the sinking of the sun below the wooded slopes behind me. I had crept to my place quite unperceived, I thought, and if there were no dogs about might reasonably hope to remain undisturbed in my co ment. Mr. Trohm, whom I had beer enabled to keep in sight from my first minute of approach, was working among his flower beds, and as his maner evinced neither perturbation nor Suddenly I heard a rustle it was very faint, but as the sun sank at that moment, I raised the cry that had been agreed upon between Miss Knollys and myself, and in so natural a tone that Mr. Trohm looked up with astonishment into the trees above. Her answer was brief and decisive. "No." she said, "I make few visits. When I do come it is to utter either a protest or a warning. This time it is a warning. Mr. Trohm, your evil practices are discovered; tomrrow you will have the police here in earnest; they did but play with you today."

THE AMERICAN DAUPHIN.

From the Heirship to the Crown of France, Charles Louis Descends Until He Becomes a Member of a Tribe of Halfbreed Indians.

From the Chicago Herald. When the people of France, stung to desperation by long and cruel wrongs under the monarchy which for 300 years had enslaved and humiliated them, in 1793 deposed and put to death their made sovereign, Louis XVI, and his queen, the beautiful Austrian, Marie Antionette, they left alive the Dauphin

Charles Louis, a boy 8 years old. Him the reigning republicans consigned to the cruel care of one Simon, the cobbler. Him the royalists proclaimed king as Louis XVII. Simon's care made the boy an imbecile, almost an idiot. He was grievously afflicted with scrofalous sores in his legs, especially about the knees. This boy was an elephant on the hands of the chosen democratic leaders of the French, people, and was equally worthless to the royalists, so It was agreed in 1794 that a committee should find means of sending the son of Louis out of the republic. But he was sick. It can readily be supposed there was an agreement made between the two hostile factions, to both of whom he was an eyesore, to relieve themselves of his presence. On the 9th of June, 1795, it was reported to the convention he was dead, and three surgeons testified that he was the victim of scrofula. He was no more in the way of Louis XVIII. and the royalists, and his case no further troubled the republican rulers of France. About the same time there appears a Caughnawa, N. Y., in the family of Thomas Williams, a half-breed of the

In about 1799, when was rescued insensible, and after some tiert he was no longer an idiot. He was sent with his brother, John, to school at Long Meadow, Mass, with a Mr. Ely. In 1826 he was ordained as a clerygyman of the Episcopal church He resided at intervals with the Iroquois about Green Bay, Wis., and with the St. Regis band in the northern part of New York. In 1841 he met the Prince de Joinville, son of Louis Phillippe After long conversation with the supposed Indian the prince announced to him that instead of being the son of half-breed Thomas Williams he was Louis XVII of France, the supposed dead idiot boy of Louis XVI, wherein the Faurhin Louis XVII was to abdicate and relinquish in favor of the then reigning sovereign, Louis Phillippe, his right and title to the throne of France, and in consideration of the relinquishment the king was to provide for the dauphin with a princely establishment, either in Europe or America, as he should choose. This document, evidentis Suzanne! ly prepared in Paris, the prince asked Williams to sign as Charles Louis, the dead dauphin, whose death in the tem-pie of Paris was believed to have occurred nearly fifty years before, but Williams refused.
