

Accessory After the Fact.

CHAPTER I--IN HIDING.

It was in old Chrysler's Hall, where Cecil Dreeme so nearly suffered martyrdom and Denseth served the devil that I met with an adventure...

some my cool nature; "but I'll swear, if I can turn, I'll never know me to betray one of yours."

Apparently there were many others of the same opinion, for Chrysler was crowded. The last successor of Jonathan Lockley gave me little encouragement...

"Yes, confound them, and that's not the worst of it," he replied with a frown. "But don't ask me any questions."

In forty years there seems to have been but little improvement in the stability of Chrysler's My immediate neighbors were invisible and inaudible...

"I'll answer the question before you ask it. I'm living here very quietly. Nobody knows that I am here. There are no reporters," I asked.

My arrival must have been unnoticed in a place so given over to mingling its own business. I caused no commotion, for I bought my predecessor's furniture as it stood, and the trifling matter of the trunks was managed with exemplary quiet.

"I did, and presently his mood changed for the better. We sat till the light began to creep in through the windows...

One morning as I was dressing some one rapped smartly upon my door. It required less than a minute to make myself fairly presentable...

"Heaven knows. Sit down, and talk of something else. Talk of old times." I did, and presently his mood changed for the better.

I liked this performance very little. It looked like a trick to subject me to scrutiny. I stepped across the hall and knocked several times upon the door, but could get no response...

"I dived not look long at it for fear that Dane would return. I wrapped it in the paper in which I had found it, and returned it to the hiding place which Dane had prepared.

"At least you know his name," said I. "Oh, yes, of course I know his name," he answered, with great frankness, "it's Smith."

"I hope that there is within me the capacity for friendship, and I am well aware that curiosity can have no part in anything so high. Perfect mutual confidence may be a good thing, but the ability to get along with a man is much better."

It may have been a week later that I was returning to my room, after midnight. It happened that there was rain and I wore rubbers, which made my steps noiseless on the floor of Chrysler's Hall.

"My temptation to pry into his affairs was stimulated by the discovery that a key which I had brought in my pocket fit my keyhole. I turned it in a city far away, fitted the lock of his door. When he was within, the door was always bolted, but when he was away, I could enter if I pleased."

"I had been another face I might not have recognized it by the scant illumination of the wavering light. He was thin, and less agreeable to the eye than in the days when I had known him at college and for a year afterwards, but had not seen him since."

"I have been a week later that I was returning to my room, after midnight. It happened that there was rain and I wore rubbers, which made my steps noiseless on the floor of Chrysler's Hall."

"I obeyed, wondering at his manner. I closed and looked the door. Then he lit a jet of gas, and turned toward me. I saw that he was changed. His face was thin, and less agreeable to the eye than in the days when I had known him at college and for a year afterwards, but had not seen him since."

ment of keys in his lock one morning when I wished to leave a note for him. On reflection it seemed best to hide my discovery from him, so I left the note close to the door as if it had been pushed under. As a matter of fact, there was not space enough, and that was the reason why I had tried the keys.

"I was sitting in my room one evening when I fancied that I heard Dane without. I turned my light low, and cautiously opened the door. Looking down the corridor, I saw a shadowy figure crouch to the wall. Its back was toward me as if the man had been leaving the corridor and had paused. He turned suddenly and ran stealthily toward me. As he came quite close I saw that it was Dane. He saw me, too, at the same moment; and, with a quick dash, he pushed under the door and darted in. I heard a step in the hall. Evidently Dane had had the rare fortune to meet one of the lodgers in that wing of Chrysler's Hall."

"I closed the door. Dane had sunk into a chair. "A close call, that!" he whispered; and he passed his hand over his moist forehead.

"I was in my heart to plead for his confidence, but I decided upon another course. I spoke of general topics. We talked for some minutes with a constraint so obvious that it would have been absurd, but for the evident, deliberate intent of all. Suddenly, I broke off in the middle of a sentence, took up the bundle from the floor, and left my room, after a moment's cautious scrutiny of the corridor.

"I heard him open his own door. A little later he came out. I was listening for that. I spied upon him; he had left the bundle in his room.

"I waited ten minutes but he did not return. Then I used my key upon his lock, while my heart accused me of a mean and despicable act.

"I opened it upon his table. It contained only an overcoat of inferior cloth and poor workmanship. Certainly it had never belonged to Dane. There were indications that a much older man had worn it, and that it had seen hard service.

"So much I noted with a glance. And then I saw something that struck a blow upon my heart. The lining of the garment was stained with great streaks and blotches of blood.

"There was not a drop upon the outside of it; nor was there any cut or bullet hole through it. My hasty thought was that it had been used to cover the body of some one who had died by violence--doubtless by murder.

"I dared not look long at it for fear that Dane would return. I wrapped it in the paper in which I had found it, and returned it to the hiding place which Dane had prepared. I was tempted to put lighter fuel under it and apply the match, but I dared not. Fire, they say, will not burn such things. Some prying fellow, in the name of the law, will always find a bonfire in the ashes and build a gallows of it."
