When invalids hear these cheering words, "I can cure you;" that is if they know him, hope springs into new being within their breasts and from that very instant a change takes place which, as a rule, brings them back to physical as well as mental health and vigor. It is this new birth of hope and confidence in Dr. Smith, an abolute faith in his powers and an absolute belief in his methods which has led hosts of patients to remark, "Well, doctor, I feel a hundred per cent. better for just having had this talk with you." And there is a psycological reason for this statement which is much deeper than any one would uppose. When a patient loses confidence in a doctor, no matter how skilled he may be, that doctor's usefulness ceases. The olute belief of a patient that he has at last found a doctor who can cure him is worth more to the doctor than all the medicines he is acquainted with, Dr. Smith and staff are permanently located in Scranton, Pa.
