I saw him before me now-a dark man, gone down to remonstrate with them-with straight black hair and rather a proceeding which I knew he would beady eyes. His features were as deli-cate as a woman's, and his figure was the foreman had been impudent and small and slight-almost dapper. His expression was very grave and brother lost his temper completely, said serious as he bowed and handed me an that the New Orleans people were the unscaled letter from the superintend-ent. It read as follows:

"Dear Sir-This will introduce Mr. John "Dear Sir-This will introduce Mr. John Phillips, whose name is perhaps familiar to you. You are very fortunate in obtaining his services, as both his health and a combination of engagements and circumstances conspired against his taking up this case. I have, however, felt under obligations to do my very best for you. obligations to do my very best for you, and, at my most urgent selicitation, he has consented to waive everything and devote himself to your matter. Yours truly, "Edward L. Sanford."

Having finished reading the above note, I shook hands with the great detective and began to express my thanks. These, however, he very quickly cut

"You have nothing to thank me for." he said coldly. "I am here under orders; and now, sir, pardon me if I ask you to tell me all you know of the circumstances connected with your brother's death. Time is always precious, and this must excuse any apparent brusqueness on my part."

His manner was indeed almost repellant, but, as I looked more closely at his face, it seemed so drawn that I was omedous of a guilty pang at having been even instrumental dragging a sick man into what bade fair to be a very arduous piece of work. There was nothing to do, however, but to relate, as briefly as possible, all that I knew. Phillips, during the recital, sat with his head resting upon his hand, while his eyes wandered incessantly about the apartment. He did not interrupt me once, but when I had finished, proceeded to put his questions. Then it was that every vestige of languor vanished. His face became strangely animated, while his eyes fairly glittered.

"You have been very full in everything that bears upon Mr. Ralph's connection with the matter," he began: "and I congratulate you. A professional could not have stated it more

Natural se lection, briefly stated, is that every kind of animal and plant tends to increase in numbers in geometrical progression; that every kind transmits a general ikeness, with individual difference, to its offspring, and that every individual has to endure a severe struggle for exstence, owing to the tendency to geometrical increase of all kinds of animals and plants, while the total animal and vegetable population, man and his agency excepted, remains almost sta-

Not the Only Menns. In the last edition of "The Origin of Species," Darwin somewhat modifies natural selection in relation to its potency as a factor in the probability of evolution. While he continued to maintain that it is the most important means by which nature has preserved an equilibrium between generation and subsistence, he does not adhere to his original possition that it is the only means. It will also be remembered that while volution is not Darwin's in any sense,

Darwin himself, a chivalrous, highninded and honest man, who wrote modestly and cautiously, always resented ascription to him of anything which was not his due. Huxley would smile with his characteristic brusqueness of candor at the absurdity of claiming for him the establishment of a theory which neither he nor any other scientific defender of evolution professed to believe susceptible of demon-

UP A LONG TIME.

The steamer S-, commanded by Captain 8—, exploded several years since on one of our southern tivers with terrible effect and burned to the water's edge. Captain S— was blown into the air, alighting near a floating bale of cotton, upon which he floated uninjured, but much blackened and muddled. Arriving at a village several miles below, to which the news of the disaster had preceded him, he was accosted by the editor of the village paper, with whom he was well acquainted, and eager for as item. "I say, boy! Is the S—blown up?" "Yes." "Was Captain S—killed?" "No; I am Captain S—." "The thunder you are! How high was you blown?" "High enough to think of every mean thing I ever did in my life before I came down." THE CHURCH URBANE.

Happy Rise of a Kindlier Spirit Among Theologians Who, Not Long Ago, Wore Metaphorically Pulling Each Other's PILSENER

From the Chicago Times-Herald.

The church militant that used to be is becoming the church urbane. Deplorable as the facts are, we cannot wipe out of history periods in which, professedly for the love of God, Christlans as vigorously as heathen resorted to mosot unchristian methods for the purpose of saving one another's souls by 100,000 Barrels per Annum torture of one another's bodies, incidentally of one another's minds. Such a thing as the retort courteous was unknown even in the highest planes of scholarship, without regard, as a wellknown amendment to a modern constitution says, to race, color, creed or previous condition of servitude.

The style in which the Christians of high degree were wont to address and write letters is exemplified by the pen of the flower of puritanism, John Milton. He was answering Salmasius, defender of Charles the Second. Some of the gentle terms employed by the author of "Lycidas" to his antagonist are "pragmatical coxcomb," "silly little scholar," "saucy tongue," "knave," "rogue," "fellow," "you slug," "silly loggerhead," "witness, senseless brawler," "hair-brained blunderbuss," "vain. flashy man," "doctor umbraticus,"

"superlative fool," "sacrilegious wretch," "blot and stain to all learned Par men," "runagate," and much more of the same. "And I persuade myself," Ask writes Milton, "the extemporary rhymes of some antic jack-pudding may 110 deserve printing better, so far am I from thinking aught he says worthy a serious answer," which nevertheless, he proceeds to make through a preface and twelve chapters. Had either possessed the conveniences necessary, words, no doubt, would have ended in something, if no more convincing, at least more conclusive. Times have changed. Polite epistolary correspondence as we used to read about in the pretty curriculum of the 95 young ladies' school, has become a resort for churchmen. No longer do they call each other names. Now all is politeness at least, if not peace.

HAD A GREAT HEAD.

"Who knows what the death rate is asked the statistical bourder. "Why." gurgled the cheerful idiot, "anyody ought to know that there is one death apiece for every inhabitant,"
The statistical boarder made some remarks on the subject of the cheerful strawberries drowned his voice in its clamor.-Indianapolis Journal.

TO OUR PATRONS:

Washburn-Crosby Co. wish to assure their many pat-rous that they will this year hold to their usual custom of milling STRICTLY OLD WHEAT until the new crop is fully cured. New wheat is now upon the market, and owing to the excessively dry weather many millers are of the opinion that it is already cured, and in proper condition for milling. Washburn-Crosby Co. will take no risks, and will allow the new wheat fully three months to mature before grinding.

This careful attention to every detail of milling has placed Washburn-Crosby Co.'s flour far above other
