James J. Corbett looks well: his color is Corbett looks well; his color is bronzed and spiendid. He stands firm and erect, and when The Tribune reporter met him at the station he grasped his hand in a manner which, to the ordinary mortal, would cause complication by

"Well," said the champion, "I want first of all to tell you that the matter was grossly exaggerated. Fitzsimmons had been drinking. I never drink, and he exasperated me beyond measure. Walk up to the St. Charles hotel and I will tell you about the matter."

"I Pulled His Nose," Sald Corbett. "We were at the hotel desk, not in the bar room, as the telegraphic article falsely states, when the unfortunate af-fair occurred. I went to the clerk to get the key of my room and saw Fitz-simmons registering. "Hello Jim!" said he. I naturally said, "How are you, old man? I hear you've been talking; you can't keep quiet, can you? You come here to Philadelphia and have been shooting off your mouth. Instead of his taking my remarks as a joke, the liquor he had imbibed caused him to take umbrage at what I said and he became so abusive that I pulled his nose, saying: 'You were going to pull my nose, but I consider you a cur.' "We naturally grappled and those "We naturally grappied and those about seized us. My brother Joe grabbed Fitzsimmons and slung him around the office. Philadelphia Version of the Scrap Philadelphia, Aug. 11.—All the sports that the general abolition of prize fight-ing and horse racing have left in Philadelphia collected at Green's hotel today and eagerly sought for details of the little "scrap" last night between Cor-bett and Fitzsimmons. Fitzsimmons left Philadelphia early this morning for New York, but the big Californian spent the day here and left for Scran-ton, Pa., this evening. When Corbett was seen today and asked for his ver-sion of last night's row his account of was seen today and asked for his version of last night's row, his account of the affair would make it seem that he intended merely to be playful and that Fitzsimmons resented this playfulness when it took the form of being called a cur and having his nose pulled. Corbett said.

I didn't think he would, but it's always best to be on the safe side, so I closed in on him, and we clinched. Then my friends grabbed me, and my brother Joe grabbed Fitzsimmons. Fitz got daffy when he found Joe could hold him, and the kid punched Fitz in the mouth.

"I couldn't get at him, so I leaned over and spat in his face, and said to him: 'You are a cur the world over, and I wouldn't have that scared look on your face for a thousand dollars.' He wiped off the spit, saying as he did so: "That's a nice thing for a man to do; you are a gentleman, you are." Here Corbett said to the reporter "Now that was a nice thing for him to say, wasn't it? If he had been a man say, wasn't it? If he had been a man he would have punched me. You would have punched any man that spit in your face, wouldn't you?" Then continuing Corbett said: "Fitz broke away and picked up a bottle and threw it at Joe, but it missed him and his Brady. Joe picked up a decanter, but they wouldn't let him throw it and then we were sengrated. Fitz went out and we were separated. Fitz went out and I stayed around the hotel. Arrived at the hotel the big man said:

"Fitzsimmons is a regular rowdy when he is in his cups; he loses all ideas of decency, and he insulted me at the desk of Green's hotel. He had been bragging of how he would pull my nose when he saw me, and had he not been so abusive I would never have said a word to him."

The allegation in Saturday's Tribune in relation to Captain Hubbell's intimacy with the Terrace buffet caused that gentleman me end of chagrin, and his friends no end of amusement. One who was considered reliable informed the reporter that Mr. Whyte's explanation of the cause of the quarrel was that Captain Hubbell had helped himself to a drink at the buffet and thereby called down upon himself a rebuke called down upon himself a rebuke from Mr. Whyte.

Last Wednesday afternoon the Times on its first page in the first column published a story under a scare head, alleging that the so-called detective Frank Agli, who gave such damaging evidence in the Rosa murder case, was a marked man by the Italians and would inevitably meet death.

Agli is an Austrian. He was incar-cerated designedly in the same cell with Joseph Rosa, the murderer of Vito Lauisso, before the trial and wormed a confession from the prisoner, which was used against him on the trial, and with the other strong chain of circum stantial evidence succeeded in convict ing Rosa of murderer in the first de-gree. The first speaker introduced was Gimlio Daina, an instructor in the School of Mechanics. He spoke in Italian, but preceded his speech with a short side speech in English, addressed to the representatives of the press, assuring them that the story in the Times was an infamous and scandalous misrepresentation of the Italian colony, that no such organization as a Mafia at that no such organization as a Mafia a present exists in Scranton, or anywhere in this country or Italy.

"But not long ago a cheap man came to this town," Mr. Ferdinando said, "you all know him; you can tell he is lazy. This man looks like an Italian and speaks like one, but he is not; he is something else. The Italians are and speaks like one, but he is not; he is something else. The Italians are charged with forming a foul conspiracy to kill him. It is an insult to the Italians; if he has done anything wrong, let the law take charge of him."

'Mr. Ferdinando left no doubt as to who he meant by this cheap man. He then explained the character of the societies. In the first place, he said, it is one of the requisites to membership in any of the Italian societies of this city and county that a man must procity and county that a man must pro duce his passports from Italy and any man not having these documents, who may have been compelled to flee for some crime he committed there, can never enter the societies.
