THE MALTBY STRIKE.

A Committee Waits on Superintendent Lathrop and States Grievance.

Yesterday morning a committee of six of the striking drivers and runners at the Maltby colliery waited on Mc. Lathrop at the Lehigh Valley com-pany's office in the Coal Exchange. The for the committee stated the grievance to be that they had not received pay for time they had worked. Mr. Lathrop said if this was a fact he had not received the grievance and the said if this was a fact he had not become fit.

Caught a Burglar.

About 1 o'clock yesterday morning Mrs. James Phillips, of Asbley, was awakened by a peculiar noise. She awake her husband, who saw a man trying to conceal himself under the bed. Mr. Billings seized the burglar and took away from him the trousers and watch the thief had abstracted from a chair near the foot of the bed. Mr. Billings held the man while a mes senger went for the police, who at once arrested him. At the hearing the burgiar said he was a Russian and gave an unpronouncable name. In de-fault of $500 ball he was sent up for appearance at court.

A Suit in Equity.

A bill in equity was filed yesterday with the prothonotary, in which Abram E. Ryman brings suit against George Spencer, William K. Goss and Henry Spencer, William K. Goss and Henry Shoemaker, supervisors of Dallas town-ship. He claims that the defendants, without and legal cause, are putting a road through his farm. The court granted a preliminary injunction re-straining the defendants from doing any work on the road at present.

Accident at Nanticoke. While making a flying switch at Nan-ticoke yesterday on the Pennsylvania railroad the brakeman gave the car too much start, and before he could check the speed the ear struck Jones & Bergen's plaining mill with such force

THE LUZERNE COUNTY RAVEN

By County Chairman John McG-hr-n. Once upon a midnight dreary, while I por

Once upon a midnight dreary, while I pon-dered, weak and weary
O'er the mighty skill that Robinson dis-played in ninety-four,
Skill which caught the our party napping;
suddenly there came a tapping.
Like a delegate filp-flapping, holding out for cash some more,
"Tis a man with a pull," I muttered,
"knocking at my office door,
And he's after cash or gore."

Ah, distinctly I remember, 'twas as cold as bleak December, August never seemed so cold, so chilly Eke, to me before,

Eagerly I wished the morrow, so that pos-sibly I could borrow Some one's News-Dealer, or Leader, howl-ing loud for Bennett's gore ing loud for Bennett's gore While an angel of Lee Stanton, with his extra fees galoroe,
It would make forevermore.

Presently my soul grew stronger, hesitating then, no longer,
"Who is there," I eried, "What message
bring you, tell me, I implore,
Will the Wilkes-Barre men grow hotter,
'Cause we turned down Nathan Dotter, Bring disaster to the ticket?" Here I opened wide the door,
Darkness there and nothing more Darkness there and nothing more.

Deep into the darkness peering, long I stood there, wondering, fearing.
Doubting whether C. Bart Sutton, much good will the ticket bore,
Lest he give a stab cold blooded, far more vicious and more studied.
Than the one that Billy Hines got in the neck in ninety-four.
Oh that stab some Democrats will rue in all the years before all the years before Billy 'll get square, if nothing more!

Then into my office turning, all my soul within me burning.

Soon I heard a tapping somewhat louder than before.

"Is that you, oh C. Bart Sutton, from the land of hay and mutton.
Tell me, are the farming districts Democratic, as of yore?"

And the wind sobbed "Nevermore."

Open then, I flung the shutter, and with many a first and flutter.

Ere I could size up the presence that was tapping at my door.

In there came, nor stopped to tarry, the pale ghost of Roger McGarry.

Trollied up Sait River by the Democrats two years before.

Cut to pieces by his party, in the fall, two years before.

On Sait River a darksome shore.

Then this spirit smiling sickly crossed the room and climbed up quickly.
On a bust of John T. Lenahan, perched above my office door;
Not a word thus far it uttered, but it heard me as I muttered.
"All our votes are going quickly, over to the Bennett corps
Can't we get some way to stop them,
Lynch's friends and lots of more?"
Quoth the spirit "Nevermore."

"What," I cried all in a minute, "Bill Mc-Lean, he won't be in 't, Unless we find a way to stop this flocking to the Bennett corps.

Jim Maloy he fought Quay county, deep defeat will be his bounty.

He will rest in bleck November, on flast River's awful shore;
Tell me can we win this battle; buy our votes as heretofore?"

Mogned the spirit, "Novembore."

And can Post defeat our Myers, who Jim Crockett's transit bore?" Quoth the spirit "Evermore."

"Bird or flend," I cried upstarting, "do you mean to say that Martin
Will knock out Lee Stanton, and send him to Sait River's shore?
Tell me, bird, in next November, will our own J. K. P. Fenner.
Be controller of the county, which was never filled before.
Will Lee Stanton be our sheriff, with extra fees as heretofore?" tra fees as heretofore?" Quoth the spirit "Nevermore."

"Be that word our sign of parting, bird or flend!" I shricked upstarting, "Get thee to the water company, and Salt River's darksome shore."
But the ghost looked at me calmly, then he said in voice qu'ite balmy, "John, before I go, I have myself to pay a little score,
And when it's paid some candidates are going to feel almighty sore."

Quoth the spirit, "Mighty sore."

And that spirit, never moving, looks around, with glance reproving.
From the bust of John T. Lenehan, just above my office door.
And his eyes are growing wicked, like a candidate that licked is,
As he waits for bleak November, to get in his work some more
And our ticket from the shadow of defeat that oomes before,
Shall be lifted—nevermore.
