

THE VIDEUX IDENTICAL

(Copyright 1895 by Irving Bacheller.)

I tried to cry out, to spring upon the fellow and battle his design, but I could neither move nor utter a sound.

Some were of remarkable size and brilliancy. I carefully sorted them and placed them in a belt about my waist for safe keeping until I could restore them to their owners.

VI--FOLLOWING THE CLUE. We buried him the next day in the little palm grove, and Mr. Delby, more nervous than ever, agreed to take charge of the funeral.

She looked at me steadily over her shoulder, and I saw that she was not a stranger.

When I went down to the wharf where stood the barrel as usual, awaiting the boat, I passed close to it, and noticed a clear handwriting on a tag in a basket.

I bowed and entered the rear room, the man holding open the door and closing it carefully behind me.

ON THE VERGE. The remainder of my task was easy. In the seclusion of my cabin I cracked each nut and examined its contents.

He gave a cry and started back with an expression of unmistakable fear upon his pale face, and I was about to improve my advantage, although I, too, was surprised and mystified, when an answering cry came from the front room.
