PROFITABLE POKER GAMES.

Yank Tighe and Jim Reynolds Charged with Playing a Bunco Game.

Yesterday afternoon Thomas Tighe, the well-known East Market street sa-loonkeeper, was arrested and taken beloonkeeper, was arrested and taken before the mayor on a charge of keeping a gambling house, in violation of both state and city laws. Ex-Policeman Jim Reynolds was arrested at the same time, charged with being a professional gambler. The prosecutor was Jacob Mann, an old grey-haired cigar agent from Allentown, and he swore that he had, at various times, played poker in Tighe's hotel. The first time was last October, when he lost $24; in November, $18; in December, $17,50, and in January, $75, of which $60 was cash, and $15 was in a check. The check was deposited by Tighe and the bank protested it. Mann was prosecuted because was deposited by Tighe and the bank protested it. Mann was prosecuted be-fore 'Squire Moyles in Laurel Run, and it cost him $70 more before the case was settled. Yesterday he went be-fore Mayor Nichols and got warrants for the arrest of both Tighe and Rey-nolds.

nolds.

At the hearing both defendants pleaded not guilty. Mann told his story, and the mayor fined Tighe $100 and held him in $1,000 bail for his appearance at court. Reynolds, who is an ex-policeman, was held in $2,000 bail for a further hearing next Tuesday. Commitments were made out for both men, but Tige was subsequently released, having obtained bail.

HORRIBLE DEATH.

An Italian Ground to Pieces on the Railroad Track.

Yesterday morning an accident resulting in the loss of a life occurred on the Jersey Central track, just above this city. Michael Dannetto and his this city. Michael Dannetto and his brother, who are both employed at the brickyard, were walking to work on the track at 6.30 o'clock, and were run down by engine 419 just opposite the Hollenback breaker. He was instantly killed and when picked up his blood-covered corpse prepicked up his blood-covered corpse presented a horrible sight. His head was cut off and crushed into a jelly, one arm was cut off between the elbow and the shoulder and the other onewas horribly lacerated. When his brother saw Mike's fate, he ran to his home, on Brewery Hill, as fast as he could go, never pausing to see whether his brother was killed or not. The train hands picked up the body and carried it to the Central station, and Mike's brother was summoned before the jury empaneled by Deputy Coroner Perkins. empaneled by Deputy Coroner Perkins. A verdict of accidental death was rendered and the body was taken care of by the brother of the deceased and buried late yesterday afternoon.

Married Yesterd av Afternoon.

At 4.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon At 4.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon Richard W. Dunn and Miss Martha Richards were united in marriage by Rev. Dr. Mills, pastor of the Memorial church, in the church building. The ceremony was attended only by the immediate friends of the contracting par-ties. Louis E. Levan was groomsman, and Miss Anna Doran was bridesmaid. After the ceremony the newly-married pair left on their wedding trip for Long Branch and other places of interest along the Jersey coast. Miss Richards is a well-known singer, a soloist in Memorial church, and a member of the Oratorio society and Klara Schumann Glee club. The groom is a prominent local stock broker.

Liquor Men Organize.

On Wednesday night National Organ-izer P. H. Nolan, of Scranton, was in town and met a number of the retail liquor dealers of this city in the hall over Tighe's hotel, on East Market street. Mr. Nolan made a strong ad-dress on the necessity of the retail dealers organizing for protection, and after some remarks by other citizens a branch association was formed, with officers as follows: President, John Rice; vice-president, Harry G. Liem; recording secretary, Henry German; treasurer, August Miller. There was a large number present, and it was decided to send a delegation to the annual state convention, which will be held in Scranton next month.

Another Robber About 2 o'clock yesterday Mrs. Jacob Farber left her home, corner of Kidder and Hortense street, Five Points, and on returning at 4 o'clock noticed that the house had been entered in her ab-sence. She had $18.25 in a machine drawer which she hid up stairs under the matting before leaving, but found that the burglars had discovered and taken the money. All the drawers in the house were opened, the carpet and matting lifted and the place ransacked. The robbers had entered through a cellar door and had gone through the house. The woman's husband, who is a hammerman in the Axle works, was sent for, but no trace could be had of the robbers.

AN IMPOSSIBLE PREMISE.

From the Wilken-Barre Record.

In that very interesting, rather unusual and probably impossible story entitled "Heart's Insurgent" running in Harper's Monthly Magazine, the author, Thomas Hardy (one of the very greatest writers of fiction of the day), endeavors to set up a standard of social conditions at variance with the accepted mode. The two leading characters, Sue and Jude, are afraid to unite their lives in the holy bonds of wedlock, lest this relation may cool their ardor for each other and lead finally to that indifference so obvious among many married people generally. As lovers they are always interesting to each other; the olimax of their affections is always kept in abeyance; the gross physical passion cannot come to vulgarize the sweet and even tenor of their ways. They droad conjugal intelicity lest it should disturb their fancies, emotions and dreams, and so they live together as lovers (but rigidly and properly be it known) delighting always in that charming spontaneity and freshness common to young people just basking in newly awakened affection. But they soon discover that they canot live in this unconventional fashlors with impunity, for their neighbors looking askance soon commence to persecute them, and to escape unjust suspicion are compelled to move often from one town to another.

Of course there is nothing new in a social condition invented by Plato, and which George Elliot and Mr. Lewes finally found impossible, and the element of surprise therefore in the story is found in sogifted a writer as Mr. Hardy erzleavoring to bolster up such absurd idealism. In the current chapters he paints the unconstrained lives of the hero and horoine in fine colors, upbraids society for making them unhappy and speaks of an average married couple (who don't enjoy themselves at a fair like Sue and Jude) as being mentally bored and in the recriminatory mood of the typical husband and wife of Christendom."

This is contrasting an ill assorted pair with an unusually congenial one with a vengeance, and Mr. Ha From the Wilkes-Barre Record.

mood of the typical husband and wife of Christendom."

This is contrasting an ill assorted pair with an unusually congenial one with a vengeance, and Mr. Hardy therefore seeks extreme and unfavorable conditions to lampoon the married state. Bue and Jude are moral, high-minded people naturally, and if they marry, as they ought to, will soon come to hugh at their absurd notions about "the yoke" which each found so insupportable as the wife and husband of Phillotson and Arabella respectively, for both have been already married and divorced. But no wonder, for these marriages were conceived in a poor, miserable spirit. Sue and Jude, however, are certainly intended for each other, and can live together as husband and wife with far more happiness than as Platonic or Shelleyan friends, but if not Mr. Hardy will be threshing over old straw and will simply have his labor for his pains. The family must be the social unit, and social disintegration will certainly come when it is not.

MOST DANGEROUS HEIGHT. llow Robert Louis Stevenson Rebuked as Egotist. A characteristic anecdote has been told since their death of the two English authors—Robert Louis Stevenson and John Addington Symonds. "The most dangerous height to which I ever climbed," said Stevenson, "was Mount Ego. I reached the top and looked all over it. I never got over that dismal view! I wouldn't advise anybody," he added, significantly, "to give himself up to looking at it. Some day one would overreach one's self, and topple in."

MR. AND MRS. RISING.

From the Times-Herald.

"The telephone is a back number now, Em'ly," said Mr. Rising, laying aside his morning paper.
"How so, John?" asked Mrs. Rising.
"A man named Gray has a new invention that makes the old 'phone take a back seat," Mr. Rising replied, "it's the telautograph."

a back seat," Mr. Rising replied, "it's the telautograph."

"What does it do, John?" was Mrs. Rising's natural inquiry.

"It writes in anybody's handwriting," explained Mr. Rising.

"I thought everybody had to use their own handwriting, just like their own name," observed Mrs. Rising.

"So they do—so they do, Em'ly," returned Mr. Rising, 'but if I went to New York I could take a telautograph pencil there and write and another pencil here would write the same thing in my handwriting."

"That's just wonderful, John, but you ain't going to New York, are you?" inquired Mrs. Rising.

"Not this evening." facetiously responded Mr. Rising. "so I won't be able to use the telautograph. Notice that name, Em'ly—autograph—you knowwrites your own name—see!"

"Yes, John, I used to have an autograph album before I was married. If I can find the book you will buy me a pencil?" asked Mrs. Rising, enthusiastically.

"What kind of a pencil, Em'ly?" Mr. Rising asked. "Why, one like you've been telling about. I'd want it to write the President's name and lots of other big men's," said Mrs. Rising with growing eagerness. "Tell-autograph is a nice name like a tel-a-phone, so plain to understand." derstand."
"Tell-a-fool," groaned Mr. Rising, under his breath.

"I'd forgotten that," said Mrs. Rising deprecatingly.

"Well, what if they are, Em'ly, since you've no call to use it, continued Mr. Rising in a mollified tone.

"But John, who would use the cable way out there?" asked Mrs. Rising, encouraged by his milder tone.

"The secretary of the state for one nan and Claus Spreckles for another," saplently observed Mr. Rising.

"Would it pay to have it for two men, John?" wonderingly inquired Mrs. Rising.

"How many people ride over the Atlantic every year, John?" pursued Mrs.
Rising, intent on information.

"Can't say, Em'ly. I don't know how many ships there are on the Atlantic

"I don't mean on the ocean, John: I mean on the Atlantic cable," and Mrs.

Rising regarded Mr. Rising with innocent interrogation.

To Mrs. Rising's alarm and astonishment Mr. Rising grew fairly purple in the face, and without a word in reply hurried out of the house.

"He looks as if something had gone to his head," mused Mrs. Rising. "He'll have a stroke some day, and black isn't becoming to me. Dear, dear, there's lot of trouble in this world," and she rocked back and forth, humming "Two Little Girls in Blue."

negative:
"No. Helen, I'm afraid you would have to do your own housework at first. I hope that it would not have to be for long, however. Something unexpecte may turn up to add to our income. Yo know, it is always the unexpected which happens," he added, with a sickly smile.
"Then, to look at the question in the face, as sensible people should look at questions, the fact is that, among other things, I should have to do the cooking.

Is that not so?"
"Yes."
"Now, I am a wretched cook. I have "Now, I am a wretched cook. I have never had any training at that sort of thing. My domestic education has been sadly neglected. If you were obliged to live upon the victuals I cooked you would be a confirmed dyspeptic in no time. Dyspepsia makes men unhappy. Now, Mr. Dinsmore, I will honestly confess that I have too great a regard for you deliberately to give you indigestion. No, it cannot be. Mr. Dinsmore, take my advice, and if you must marry before your circumstances are such that you can keep a capable maid-of-all-work, marry a girl who is a good cook."

As the interview seemed over, Mr. Dinsmore bowed himself out, and went to his lodgings a crushed and broken

CONTROL OF THE SENATE.

Six Populist Senators Will Hold Balanc

A characteristic anecdote has been told since their death of the two English authors—Robert Louis Stevenson and John Addington Symonds. Stevenson, though one of the kindest men in the world, was one of the frankest, and would often startle his companions by on outburst of candor which, like a flash of lightning, revealed their shortcomings.

He visited his friend Symonds when he was last in England, and bore goodhumoredly for a day or two with the perpetual morbid self-analysis and complaints of the injustice of fate with which that able man incessantly tormented himself and his friends.

At last, while they were speaking of Alpine travel, Symonds asked his guest what was the distiest height to provide the self-analysis and complaints of the injustice of fate with which that able man incessantly tormented himself and his friends.

At last, while they were speaking of Alpine travel, Symonds asked his guest what was the distiest height to which he had ever climbed, and which had alarmed him most.

"The most dangerous height to which I ever climbed," said Stevenson, "was Mount Ego. I reached the top and looked all over it. I never got over that dismal view! I wouldn't advertise the sent him. They could accomplish this result with the co-operation of the Populists, but it is not at all probable that the latter, who have a keen cyc for political advantage, would, by sent-ing Colonel Dupont, aid in depriving themselves of the balance of power which they now hold between the two which they now hold between the two parties.

Should the Republicans succeed in having Colonel Dupont admitted there will be a full senate of eighty-eight members, forty-five being necessary for a majority. Without Colonel Dupont and with one of the seats of Delaware 'vacant, the senate would consist of eighty-seven members, of whom forty-four would constitute a majority, so that this disputed senatorial seat, however the matter may be decided, would not give the Republicans control of the senate. They will in any case be two votes short and must look for these to the Populists or to an alliance with at least some of the to an alliance with at least some of the Populists.

The six Populist senators are Peffer, of Kansas; Allen, of Nebraska; Butler of North Carolina, and Tillman, of South Carolina. Four of these sena-South Carolina. Four of these sena-tors were former Republicans and two former Democrats, and should the Populist senators vote as individuals the Republicans would probably win. Should, on the other hand, the six Populists vote together, an alliance with the Democrats would be much more likely than one with the Republi-cans for two reasons: First, because a large number of the Democratic sen-ators have Populistic leanings: and ators have Populistic leanings; and second, because for two years to come the patronage of the Federal govern-ment will be in the hands of Demo-crats, and senators on friendly rela-tions with the administration can hope for more for their constituents than tions with the administration can hope for more for their constituents than senators who, without the justification of party principle, are arrayed against it. Should the Populist senators, as some Populist leaders expect, refuse to make an alliance with either politi-cal party, their former Republican friends may be anable to organize the senate and there would be a deadlock over the offices, with the Populists in over the offices, with the Populists in practical control.

WHISTLER AGAIN ERUPTS.

From Barron's London Letter.
Apropos of gentility, courtesy and the like, Whistler's latest piece of eccentric causticity of phrase indeates a decline of cleverness to emphasize his want of manners. Alma-Tadema, recertly lecturing to students, struck some warning notes against the evil of meretricious bric-abrac in art, and incidentally cited the canary-colored curtains of Whistler as very excellent things to avoid. Whereupon the only J. McNeill, writing from Paris to a public print and demanding to be informed what Alma-Tadema knows "of my hangings," commits himself to this clumsity feeble effort at satire: "His Romano-Dutch-St. John's-Wooden eye has never looked upon them! And the jaundice of his flesh is none of the running of my yellows." Here is a nice derangement of epitaphs to flatter a Mrs. Malaprop, followed by a brilliant couplet, brighnal with the thrice accomplished J. W.:

To know is a great word,
Tadema boom-de-ay!
Whistler has been slent some time, and this example of the power of accumulated thought may tempt some to wish that he had kept silence a little longer.

"F am very poor," she said appealingly "and I am trying to do a little something to carn my own living." Then she laid a little satchel on the desk and looked at him as if asking permission to open it.
"What have you?" he asked.

"Don't need it," he said. "The building supplies soap and towels to all offices here."
"Couldn't you buy a little to help me along?" she pleaded.
"Oh, I suppose so; but I hardly know what to do with it down here."
"I would be very grateful, sir," she persested. "I am a poor woman and have
