WAS THE DOG MAD?

Found Fomling at the Mouth and Promptly Killed.

Yesterday morning the people who happened to be on Church street about 8 o'clock witnessed a sight which is quite rare on our streets, and which they will not want to see again. The cause of all this excitement was a dog, such as are seen roaming about the principal streets at any time in the day. But it was not exactly the dog itself, but because it showed signs of hydrophobia, that made people avoid the spot where it was lying and to be ready to run should it show any signs of wishing to taste human flesh. But the canine was in too much pain to pay any attention to the pedestrians, and besides was unable to walk. Mayor Hendrick, who happened to pass in his carriage saw the animal, and, going to the city building, gave orders that it should be killed.

CONSERVATIVE LAWYERS.

From the Times-Herald.

The practice of the law tends to conservatism. To stand upon ancient ways, to study precedent, and to make present affairs conform to what has been done in the past, is the main business of a lawyer. His time and thought are engaged in the effort to show that his client's case comes within rules that have long since been established by learned judges. Hence he dreads the innovation, and when it is proposed to cut away from the mere practice of the law, he is at first slow to effect reforms he will cling to the forms because he is accustomed to them, and if does not care to learn new methods. Thus there is a perpetually growing conservatism at the bar that is fairly immoveable.

Take, for instance, the address of Mr. Justice Brandeis before the bar association. He pointed out the evils of the delays in our criminal justice, and showed most unambiguously the viciousness of our present system in criminal cases. There is no person that has considered the question but that has heartily agreed with him. And yet, and that stands toward reform in this practice should be taken immediately. But what does the bar association do? Instead of appointing a committee to carry the matter at once before congress and the various state legislatures, so that the earliest possible moment some legislative reform may be effected, a committee is simply appointed to investigate the matter and report upon it at the next meeting of the bar association one year from now! As if we were to wait!

And that is the history of law reform as wrought by the bar association. An evil pointed out, a reference to a committee, and a report a year hence, by which time the whole subject has passed from public mind. But that's the way our effort for the law, and a time will come when the reforms will be made, if not with the aid of the bar then without it.

THE YANKEE VOICE.

Mary Abbott, in Times-Herald.

Speaking of national picadilloes, the human voice American needs a warning word. And the vox humana femina American, in particular. Listen to the children of America and the children of England in corresponding classes and you will know why. The training of the voice begins with early articulation in England. The nurses have quite as refined voices as the mothers. Not only does the baby not hear whining, fretful, drawing nasal tones over the head, but as soon as it begins to talk it is taught to moderate its own shrillness. A child's voice is not naturally high, except that it is uncontrolled; an English child of three, in any worded family, will tell you about her; and it learns to keep its impulses to "holer" for toys or food well down. The American child bawls: "Can I have my mother on and go to bed?" The American mother howls: "Yes, darling, but you needn't scream so." An English mother, in reply to a similar squeal, would say: "May you? Ask me a low tone and I'll tell you." The first child pays no attention to the "You needn't scream so." What's the use? He gets what he wants, just the same.

The result is more than worth the trouble. American children bawl in the house and the street; American grown girls cackle, and American women whine shrilly. The female American voice is like a tune high and out of tune at that. Every parent appears to think that the toning down will come in time; but it won't; and if it does, the battle will have been long and bitter. Write about it, a lady said to me, keep writing about it; write often; tell women not to try to change their inflection, their accent or their enunciation, but to speak their own tongue as well as they can, only to speak lower. That's the point. When women speak low, the rest comes of itself. You can't be rough or slangy, or even ungrammatical, very well, in a cool, low voice. So there are more gains than one.

The difficulty is in making women acknowledge that the national voice is bad. They may admit that an exaggeration is shrill, but they cannot detect the shrieking quality in single voices, because they are used to them. Any one who has been abroad, I do not know where, for a year, living in New York, on returning will think he has come to a land of peacocks and maples. Members of his own family will be as bad as the rest; and he will begin the great work of reconstructing the vocal economy before he has been in the country ten minutes, and will be cordially rallied at as affected and spoiled by his travels.

Worn Out Women

Should read this letter. It shows the wonderful building-up powers of Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier.

"I wish I could stand in some public place and cry to all mankind, 'Hear this, ye people, what wonderful things Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for me and my family.' I cannot express what I suffered. Only one of my sex knows what a woman can suffer in my condition. I was prostrate with nervousness and weakness. The least noise would drive me frantic. I decided to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. I am overjoyed to say that I am now well, hearty, rosy and plump."

MOLLY IN THE CITY.

Molly in the city's always pining: "Why don't they build the houses so's they won't shut out the sky? What's the use of water works where there's never flow? I want to see the gardens where the old-time roses grow."

Molly in the city's always grinning: "Why don't the mornin' glories climb the building's broad and high? What's the use of flowers that's shut up day and night? I want to see the gardens where the butterflies are bright!"

No use talkin' to her; wayward as can be. Give a block o' buildings for an old-berry tree. In the middle of a meadow, where the lights and shadows flit, An' a mockin' bird a-singin' in the very top of it. —Frank L. Stanton.

GRATITUDE.

Another man expresses his gratitude to Dr. Smith and staff for curing him of a bad case of catarrh of the head. Mr. Gust Lager called on Dr. Smith and staff. He was suffering from a bad case of catarrh. It had caused catarrh inflammation of the throat and had extended to the inner ear, impairing his hearing and causing peculiar sounds in his ears, which annoyed him very much. He would frequently imagine some one had spoken to him when, in fact, there was no one near him at the time. He commenced taking magnetic treatments. The first two weeks he thought he was worse. The second two weeks showed a slight change for the better. He kept on improving and in ten weeks was satisfied that he was cured. All chronic diseases are cured by these doctors. Call and see them. Consultation free, 9 to 5 daily, Tuesdays and Fridays, 9 to 9, at 505 Linden street.
