who knew her. The floral offerings were unusually large, many of the friends of the deceased taking this means of showing their esteem for her. The pall bearers were: Messrs, J. F. Reynolds, Dr. C. T. Meaher, A. W. Reynolds, H. O. Watrous, J. B. Shan-non and C. W. Mellon. Among those from out of town were: Wr and Wrz, D. W. Wingste and fam. Inch. Daniel Lynch, a former resident of this city, an employe of J. H. Byrne, had a narrow escape from death Tues-day night, being stabbed by a person whom he was trying to arrest, a young man. It is just by the merest chance that Mr. Lynch is now alive, as the knife nearly entered the heart and the great aorta, the artery leading from the heart, but being missed by a siz-teenth of an inch.

knife nearly entered the heart and the great aorta, the artery leading from the heart, but being missed by a six-teenth of an inch. The person who did the stabbing was Billy Loughney. Loughney and his brother, "Bunt," had climbed into the wagon of Mr. Byrne and had ridden some distance. Soon after they got out, a jug of whiskey was missed by the driver, Reuben Sears, who found that it had been taken by the Loughneys. In company with Mr. Lynch, Sears went to the office of Justice Bryden where warrants for their arrests were made out. There did each was a state of the sta

From the Times-Herald. There is in America but one cult, and that is the Lincoln cult. Ten years ago the small beginnings of a Napoleon cult were observed in France, and as times passed the influence of the study passed the frontiers of that country and occupied the attention of the world. We learned more of the great Corsican than ever had been known before. The Napoleon scholar was better informed as to the motives, the details of life aims and the secret purposes of Na-poleon than his closest advisers in life had been. This was easily explained had been. This was easily explained by the fact that Napoleon kept his coursel. Those immediately about him were never trusted—and, perhaps, with-good reason. One man here was in-trusted with a little—enough for the accombilehment of the purpose for which he was selected by the emperor. Another became the recipient of differ-ent data. And so on till campaigns re-sulted in victories; till diplomacy ended in French success. But the total was not known to anyone at any time. It was only after nearly a century had
