Manner of His Death. Manner of His Death.

Mattias Supon, the Hungarian who was with Constable Jefferson L. Roesler at the time he was killed, explained last evening to Alderman Millar, with the aid of an interpreter, the manner in which Mr. Roesler was killed.

Both of them, he said, saw the train approaching when they were about fifteen yards from the crossing. Intuitively they stopped but it seems on sectively fley stopped, but it seems on sec-ond thought Roesler decided to get across ahead of the train, and started across anead of the train, and sarred on a quick walk, telling Supon to hurry up. The unfortunate man mis-calculated the distance or the time he had to get across before the train could reach the crossing and thus lost his life. Supon did not make the at-tempt, even after Roesler urged him to follow.

At first the impression got abroad that Supon also crossed in front of the train, but his statement proves this to Retail Liquor League Men Stay Over to thave a Good Look at Us.

A number of the delegates to the retail liquor men's convention remained overyesterday to have a look at the city. The hurried giance which they got in the few hours not devoted to convention business so impressed them that they wanted to see more, and, accordingly, a party of about fifteen was organized to "do" the city yesterday.

They were escorted about by a committee of the local organization, headed by John J. Flanaghan. During the day they visited the mines and other places of interest, and in the evening took in the steel mills. Today all will took in the steel mills. Today all will leave for their homes.
