the could permit him to go in a first interview, and it is questionable if he could have realized how far it seemed to her expectant senses. She arose, smiling and saying lightly, "Your friend would not allow anybody to forfriend would not allow anybody to for-get you; they were so constantly specu-lating upon what had become of you." But, as they walked slowly toward where Amy and Ross were siting, at the other end of the room, she stepped and said earnestly: "I want to apolo-gize for listening to what you said that day. It was rude of me to do so, but you were so close and spoke so clearly that I could not help hearing you." "You have nothing to apologize for. I am glad you heard me, if it helped you to remember me."

you to remember me."
"I think it did," she replied laugh-ingly. "And did you never miss that day and have, ever since, earned all I required. It is surprising how little a man really needs."

"Have you heard anything lately about the sult?" asked Ross, as they approached him.
"Yes," answered Jack. "Court of "No. Why should I? Even if they

"A man needs useful occupation

"I am sorry to hear you say so. You evidently forget the pious maxim that 'Satan finds some mischief still for busy hands to do. "I should think," remarked Con-stance, "you would wish to get away from a class of men capable of assas-inating those they do not happen to Only a few of the men are bad, and they are so only through ignorance. Men who have the courage to toll honestly for a livelihood, are inherently capable of noble deeds, and only do base ones through lack of moral and social development."

THE BEST OF ALL

IN ALL THINGS AT ALL TIMES.

There are many GOOD life insurance companies, but among them all there must be one BEST. THE BEST is THE EQUITABLE. If you wish to know why, send for: 1, the report of the Superintendent of Insurance for the State of New York on the examination of The Equitable; 2, for actual results of maturing policies; 3, for statement of death claims paid in 1894. Then you will know the three great reasons of The Equitable's supremacy: 1st, its financial stability; 2d, its great profits and advantages to living policy-holders; 3d, the promptness of its payments and liberality of its settlements.

That was gratifying, but as far as up must have lacked a good deal," commented Ross.
"Yes, but they were only tools. The worst scoundrel in that bad affair was one who did no honest work, Janovies, and by the time he comes out of state prison, working men, I hope, will have grown mentally and morally beyond his influence.

The evening was a very pleasant one, and when Jack, on reaching home, set his little alarm clock to arouse him at daybreak he said to himself deliber-ately: "When I am an iron-master, I shall make that girl Mrs. Burroughs."

Summer's heats had come, yet Con-stance would not make up her mind where she would go, out of town. "I don't care a last year's bird's nest said Aunt Keturah, "where we go, so long as it isn't everywhere and we get off before snowstorms make travelling bad."

"Pack Up and Let Us Be Off."

Amy Thorpe declared, "I just won't go anywhere without you this summer. Constance, and if I die from staying in town, you will be responsible, mor-ally at least. So pack up and let us be off to Bar Harbor at once."

off to Bar Harbor at once."

"Where do you suppose Mr. Burroughs intends to spend his vacation?"
replied Constance inconsequently.
"Don't you think Hoss could find out?"
Ross tried and his report was far from encouraging. "Jack says he is not going anywhere; that habor is allowed only one vacalities."

going anywhere; that habor is allowed only one vacation, the long one that comes after everything else."

"Heavens!" exclaimed Amy; "what a pessimistic mood he must be in. That is the effect of the weather already."

"Yes," assented Ross, looking very seriously at Constance, "scientists recognize that continuous exposure to a temperature from elegity to nindy. cognize that continuous exposure to a temperature from eighty to minety degrees provokes melancholy and from ninety-five up, especially with humidity incites to murder. John ought to be carefully watched this summer. The girls looked alarmed—particularly Constance, though she said least. "I know," continued Ross, "of a watering piace heither of you is acquainted with; the biggest and joillest, and best in the land; where the amusements are most diversified, the luxuries unbounded, the inconveniences fewest, the extortions least, and within easy reach of Jack—"
"Where is $2.7 Where is it?" they cried, interrupting him.
"Dieta here New York," he affirmed. ried, interrupting him.
"Right here, New York," he affirmed, with an air of confidence.

And when he gave them a vague outline of what they had, all their lives, turned their backs upon and missed, they said, "This summer we will take it all in—and Jack shall be our excuse."

Jack was shy at first. He was sensitive about being seen, recognized and claimed by old-time acquaintances before he had conquered the position at which he aimed, and he had got quite out of the way of holiday-making. But when Ross assured him that none of their old set were in town and hinted that Constance expected his company-had even, perhaps, remained in the city on his account-he resisted no longer. And soon it became a regular habit for him, when work stopped at noon, on Saturdays, to change his clothes at the foundry and go directly to keep an ap-pointment with Ross and the girls. Merry times they had at Manhattan Beach, Long Branch, Coney Island, Rockaway, Glen Island and some other popular resort. The scenes presented to them had all the charm of novelty for Constance and Amy, and was suffi-ciently varied to retain their interest. Even South Beach, Fort Lee and Bow-ery Bay were visited, once each, but Amy declared that was as near "slumming" as she cared to go, and as much of it as she could stand, so thereafter Ross—whose experiences were thorough—knew just where to draw the line." Altogether they passed a very jolly summer and, for two at least of the quartette, it was also a very happy

In October, the court of appeals re-versed the decision of the lower court in the case involving the Burrough's estate, blighting utterly the hopes of the rascally conspirators and making Jack a rich man again. On the same day that this intelligence reashed him, he made a formal proposition to the pro-prietors of the Vulcan works, to buy a large interest in their business, which they took under advisement. Not until the matter was decided would Jack say anything to his friends about changed fortune, or essay what he had determined should be the next number n his programme. Even after its steel frame has been erected, a long time is required for the finishing of one of the monster modern office buildings. The skeleton must be clothed with stone, its interior divided by fire and sound proof floors and pararound the structure. The snow-clad titions, its hall-ways wainscotted with costly polished marbles, and a world of intricate appliances for lighting, heating, ventilating, etc., put in place. It was deemed a marvel of expedition, when the great building Jack worked on in the spring had been brought to completion by November. Its proprietors, justly proud of their handsome edifice, resolved to signalize the event, and at the same time make a most effective announcement of their readiness to accommodate tenants, by giv-ing such a 'house-warming' as had never been seen in New York. Their in-vitations were sent out broadcast, to vitations were sent out broadcast, to "society" people, bankers, merchants, speculators, investors, everybody in fact sufficiently prominent to be thought of, and, in a kindly spirit of old-fashloned fraternity unfortunately much rarer now than it used to be—to all the men who had been conspicuously engaged, even in subordinate capacities, in the actual erection and completion in the actual erection and completion of the building. Democratic as this comprehensive in-gathering was, it produced one of the most brilliant and notable everts of the season.

For that night, the big building dedi-cated to the stern practicalities of business life, was transformed to a business life, was transformed to a fairy-land palace. Rooms, halls and stairways were tastefully decorated with flowers, evergreens and bunting; electric lights flooded the scene with illumination more intense than sun-shine and the air was tropical with warmth and perfume. which he himself was not aware. Certainly. Constance would accompany him, and she asked Amy to go along which that astute young woman declined, saying she preferred to dance, and when Ross manifested an inoppor-tune desire to have a look from the dome with them, she gave his arm such a meaning pinch that he quickly changed his mind.

From the twentieth story, where a grand banquet was being set out, Constance and Jack ascended three flights of stairs, to the upper floor of the dome. city, sparkling with its myriad lights and overhung by a radiant golden can-opy, was indeed a fair sight to see and they stood for a few moments as if spell-bound by its beauty. But John Bur-roughs had not come up there to admire scenery.

"Constance," he said, "I have brought you up here nominally to see, but really to hear. For some time, in fact and kissed her.

At that instant, from the dome of a distant newspaper building, the vast white beam of an electric search light was flashed full upon the lovers. The pretty tableau they presented lasted but a second, for Constance, with a scream and Jack with an ejaculation that was not a blessing, vanished into the dome.

"Constance," he said, "I have brought you up here nominally to see, but really to hear. For some time, in fact ever since I have known you, I have felt that the happiness of my life depended upon my making you my wafe. Of course, I said nothing to you of my love so long as my position was intermediate and my future doubtful. Those conditions exist no longer. The foundary-foreman has become an iron master. And now I am able to say to you, Constance, I love you, with my whole heart and soul, and I want you to be my wife. Will you?

"Yes; very willingly," she replied, meeting his ardent gaze with a look eloquent of affection.

He drew her to him in a fond embrace, and kissed her.
