Tribute to Representative O'Malley.

Aniong the visitors to Wilkes-Barre yesterday was C. P. O'Malley, of Scranton. Mr. O'Malley enjoys the distinction of being the youngest member of the state legiskture, being but 21 years old, and since his election he has frequently been called the "baby of the legislature." Though of humble birth he, by industry and pluck, combined with a realiging sense that "tur lives are what we make them." he overcame seemingly insurmountable obstacles, until at this time he is rightly considered one of the most promising young men in this part of the state. Before he was 8 years of age he began life as a size picker and passed successively through all the grades of the mining industry, being by turns a breaker boy, door tender, criver, foot tender, company hand and labter. After he went from the breaker o the mines every spare moment that cane to him was spent with useful books and in the evening he attended night school. Thus he advanced until at the age of 15 he opened a night school in the basement of his father's house, where he imparted instruction to his companions. A year later he left the mines and entered a grocery store, many of whose patrons were Slava and Poles, and from them he mastered their language fluently. He subsequently took a business course at Wood's college, studied law, and last year was admitted to the bar. He was also nominated by the Republicans last year for the legislature and though the Fourth district of Lackawanna is Democratic by about 800 majority. Mr. O'Malley is an unusually bright young man for one of his years, a favorite among those who know him and a man who once met is never forgotten.—Wilkes-Barre Times.

PERRETTO'S FATE IN DOUB

Jury Had Not Agreed Upon a Verdict at Midnight.

IT RETIRED AT THREE O'CLOCK

Closing Argument to the Jury by District Attorney Jones-Judge Archbald's Charge-Explained What Constituted Degrees of Murder.

Judge Archbald's charge to the jury in the Perretto murder case was fin-ished at 3.05 yesterday afternoon. It occupied an hour and 10 minutes. The fate of Pasquela Perretto was placed in the hands of the jury, and the twelve men, good and true, were marshaled to their room in charge of Tipstaffs Sutto and Keller. Up to midnight they had not agreed upon a verdict.

District Attorney Jones opened his argument for the commonwealth at 9.30 in the morning. He went carefully over the evidence and reviewed it logically to the minds of the jury. it logically to the minds of the jury. They had heard, he said, the defendant tried for the murder of Michael Demarko. The trial judge is one of the fairest that could be found in this state, and every opportunity was given that a fair, honest and free trial should be given to Perretto. Mr. Jones scoffed the idea of a conspiracy to convict the defendant; such a thirm, he said, had defendant; such a thing, he said, had existence only in the minds of the defendant's counsel.

As to the Law of Solf-Defence.

The law of self defense could not have any weight, Mr. Jones said, in this case, for it had been shown that Perretto left the scene of the quarrel to retto left the scene of the quarrel to arm himself and came back armed. This the law does not allow. A person must not return to, a fight, and if he does the plea of self-defense is no justification. The motive Perretto could have for the murder and how he could have formed a premeditated intent to kill was presented very clearly. Perretto was not intoxicated, so that Perretto was not intoxicated, so that his mind was befoggled; he was sober and responsible for his actions. He saw his cousin. Peter Perretto, in the midst of a free fight, being set upon by John Corello and Michael Rich, and he went upstairs and armed himself. There had been no ter brony on either side to show that Departs, the murdered man, was engaged in the fight. It was 1.55 before Judge Archbald began his charge to the jury. What the jury must consider he said, first of all was, did Pasqueia Perretto kill Michael Demarko? If the defendant had in his possession such weapons, a had in his possession such weapons, a revolver and stiletto, when he came downstairs and Demarko was seen to fall immediately after Perretto ap-proached the doorsten, where Demarko was standing, it would be a hard mat-ter not to conclude and infer that the defendant did the killing. Immediate-ly after Demarko fell, Perretto at-tempted to escape.

empted to escape Said Perreto Did Not Do Killing. The defense had consistently main-tained throughout the trial that Per-retto did not do the killing at all; and Judge Archbald touched lightly on the matter of self-defense, and advised the jury not to spend too fine a theory on that branch of the case. The charge of the court was directed mostly to making clear to the jury the grades of murder. Malice is the distinguishing criterion of murder in the first degree. The law regards the informatic man nature and certain conditions of the mind constitute a palliation of the crime, so as to reduce the degree.

If the act were done in the heat of passion on the sudden impulse of the moment, that would go far to discredit the assumption that the murder was deliberate and premoditated. Yet, Judge Archald said, it would be dif-ficult for a person to use such a weapon as the one that killed Michael Demarko and aim it with such deadly purpose at a vital point, inflicting certain death, without having a specific ity seem scanty for the formation of a premeditated design to commit first degree murder. The six law points submitted by the defendants counsel

Jessie Hall, who was convicted for selling liquor without a license and sell-ing on Sunday, was sentenced by Judge Noyes; in the first case the sentence of the court was a fine of $500, the costs of prosecution and three months in the county jail; in the second case, a fine of $50, the costs and twenty days in jail, the second period of imprisonment to be computed at the end of the first. Verdicts of not guilty were taken before Judge Archbald in the main court room after the Perretto homicide case went to the jury in eighteen cases that had been marked down for trial this week. The reasons for the verdicts were that some of the parties came to a settlement, and in other cases the prosecutors did not appear. prosecutors did not appear.

The cases of fortune telling and keeping a bawdy house against Mary Mahon were called up, but the prosecutor, John Tierney, was out in the corridor and did not hear his name called, although Crier Snyder could be heard downstairs. The attorneys for the defendants asked for a continuance, but court refused the request and said the case must be tried next week, providing the district attorney feels it convenient to

VERDICT AGREED UPON.

Potter Jury Came to a Conclusion at

O'Clock Yesterday Afternoon. Judge Lynch delivered his charge to the jury yesterday in the trespass case of George W. Potter against the Scranton Traction company, and at 11.30 the case was given to the jury. It agreed upon a verdict at 5 p. m. and sealed it. This morning it will be brought into

The charge consisted of a careful review of the testimony and an exposition of the law relating thereto. Among other things he said: "The law is that no matter how negligent the defendant may have been, if the plaintiff is also negligent he cannot recover. The plaintiff has testified that he had for many years driven through the streets of Dunmore and that his horses had many times passed the repairing tower erect-ed on wagons and were not frightened thereby. Then there is the question of the character of the horses. Were they gentle and well-broken? On cross-ex-amination Mr. Potter testified that once several years before one of the horses had run away.

"If the horses were not gentle and well-broken then the plaintiff cannot recover, no matter haw he may have suffered. If, however, the horses were gentle and well-broken he had a right to drive them by the appliance. there is the question whether Mr. Pot-ter could have seen this appliance, which he himself says was of a nature frighten horses, in time to avoid it.

is guilty of negligence "If you decide," said the judge, "that the plaintiff is entitled to damages you have then to fix the amount. To determine this you must take into consideration the plaintiff's physical condition previous to the accident. According to the Carlisle tables, if he was sound physically at the time of the accident, he could expect to live about nineteen years. Yet this is a poor thing to decide upon. There can be no cer to decide upon. There can be no certainty how long a man will live after a given time. You must take into consideration the nature of the injuries and you may compensate him for his loss of earning power, for his disfigurement, for medical services, for nursing, and you may give him fair and reason-able compensation for these, but it is not the intent of the law that the company shall be punished."

It was remitted, as Mr. Stock convinced the alderman that he did not know it was necessary to secure a permit, being new in the business. George F.
