On a Sunday evening in the December of 1888 Police Officer John Ellis was shot and killed at the water tank on shot and killed at the water tank on the Keyser Valley branch of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western road. Four men, supposed to be tramps, had taken possession of the tank and the watchman, Michael Brown, unable to make them vacate, sent to the West Side police station for assistance. John Davis, now police lleutenant; Thomas V. Lewis and John Ellis, were detailed to capture the gang and went thither never suspecting that resistance would be offered.

An Arabian peddler, calling himself Mike Sullivan, came to this country eight months ago, having in his company a 10-year-old girl whom he impressed into his business of hawking pressed into his business of hawking trinkets from house to house. They traveled about from one place to another, and five weeks ago reached Athens, in Bradford county, where the little girl suddenly disappeared.

The peddler, with his brother, sought everywhere for his charge, but could not solve the mystery of her disappearance, until a few days ago, when the girl was located in the Bradford county almshouse at Towanda.

Straightway the Arabian hastened to reclaim the girl, but to his utter disappointment the poor authorities refused to give her up, believing that it was not for the girl's good to allow her to go wandering about the country with Arabian peddlers and alleging

Fastened the Crime on Kent.

Fastened the Crime on Kent.

Kent, Judd Wolcott and Paddy Devers, who was killed in the Baldwin Locomotive works four years ago, were suspected of the burgiary. Wolcott became a stool pigeon for the detectives and fastened the crime on Kent. It afterwards developed that the burgiars hid their swag in an old deserted mine and that Wolcott stole it from the hiding place and hid it in a culm pile in Dunmore, where it was afterward discovered by Chief Simpson.

Kent was a shoemaker by trade, and kept a shop in Dunmore near the corners. His place was the rendezvous for these and other bad men, and was the scene of the concoction of many a bold and daring criminal plot. Wolcott was the worst of the trio, it was believed, and later events establish that this belief was about correct. Kent worked every day and was apparently an honest, industrious citizen, and, in fact, no crime except that of harboring Wolcott, was ever fastened upon him, except on the evidence of this same Wolcott. Park church last night attracted a large audience. It was the first of a series of organ concerts that will be given during the season by J. Alfred Pennington, organist, assisted by Miss Winifred Sullivan, soprano; Miss Eisle Van Dervoort, contralto; Alfred Wooler, tenor, and Richard Thomas, cept on the evidence of this same Wol-

Since he has been heard in Scran-ton, Mr. Pennington has won considerable approbation, and the compliment was won over again last night by the cott.

Kent, as may be readily believed, knew of the doings of his pal. Wolcott. This, Kent now says, was what sent him to the penitentiary the last time. Wolcott and he had a disagreement, and it was through fear of disclosure that Wolcott swore him into prison so that he might be out of the way, and his testimony, if he was tempted to make a disclosure, might be discreditable. It is a significant fact that on July 25 last, eight days previous to Kent's release from the penitentiary, Wolcott disappeared from Dunmore and has not been seen since.

He Told Chief Simpson About It. The startling disclosure of the Ellis mystery was made by Kent to Chief of Police Simpson yesterday morning, and later in the day he detailed the whole story to a Tribune reporter, but at the ing for publication. On the morning following the Ellis murder Wolcott came to the shop, greatly excited and said to Kent, "For sake keep this date in your mind, and if you are ever asked about it swear that I slept with you all night, and was home all afternoon." Kent asked him what the trouble was, and beloved by pupils and a large circle of friends, especially on account of her beautiful character and Christian preat first he refused to tell, but finally confided to him that he had shot a cept.

She was born in this city Jan. 17. 1867, and graduated from the high school in 1884. Soon afterward she began her career as a public school teacher and continued the vocation until about a policeman. He said that he and three other men went to Hyde Park to "tap" a place, and wishing to come in by the back way, went around from Dunmore to Providence and then down Keyser Valley. At the tank they went in to hide and keep warm until nightfall, when they intended to steal up through the fields to the place which they were going to rob. Kent did not inquire what place they had in mind. The powhat place they had in mind. The po-lice swooped down on them, and they had to use their revolvers to get out. Wolcott said he hit one of the cops, but did not know whether or not he killed him. Wolcott then took a refrom his pocket removed the three of which were loaded and two discharged, and, stirring up the coals in the stove, shoved the revolver

Kent says the revolver had a red-wood handle, on which the name "J. Price" was cut in large letters. He did not know who J. Price might be. When the fire had totally disfigured grounds as a monument and park site can now be answered definitely.

Several months ago F. E. Platt was asked by Secretary Atherton, of the board of trade, if the Platt estate would consider a proposition to sell the property to the city. At a recent meeting of the heirs it was decided not to sell. With the decision there was an inference given that the matter might be considered after it was seen what the revolver, Wolcott picked it out of the stove with a poker, immersed it in the bucket of water, which the cobble cooled sufficiently to be handled, took it up and started out saying he would "put it where Jesus Christ Himself would not find it." He was gone about three-quarters of an hour, and upon his return went to bed.

Wolcott's Midnight Vist. A spell after this, as he put it, Kent gave up his shop, and went to live in the country just beyond Dunnings, boarding with Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Martin. One night about 12 o'clock Is prepared to take pupils in plane and theory at her studio, No. 295 Washington avenue, Tuesslay, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday of each week, Entrance through J. W. Guernsey's music store. Martin. One night about 12 o'clock Wolcott came there and asked for him. Mrs. Martin, who was sleeping on the ground floor, admitted him after arousing Kent and her husband. The husband did not get up, but Kent went downstairs to see what the trouble was. The two men sat down in the front room, and when Mrs. Martin withdrew Wolcott told Kent that the police were after him for the burning of Savage's building in Dunmore; he had come out Between the Academy of Music and the Frothingham. The fire in Savage's building oc-curred while Wolcott and Kent were staying in the shop in Dunmore. Kent commenced to murmur against being drawn into all of Wolcott's crimes and a long interview occurred, during which the murder and other matters were discussed. After getting Kent's word that he would stick to him, and agreeing upon a story to tell in case of arrest.

Wolcott drove away and got back to Dunmore before daylight.

Mrs. Martin, like any ordinary woman, was curious to know what business could bring a man to the house at that unseasonable hour, and during the that unseasonable hour, and during the conversation in the front room she was posted at the door leading to the hallway which separated the front room and her bedroom. Although they spoke in guarded tones, she heard all that was said, and the next morning she told Kent that she knew the Savages in Dunmore, and she was going to tell who set fire to their building.

Kent asked her if she had heard anything else and she said: "I know what I heard, and I know what I am going to tell." The woman tidd 'Squire Leichworth of the incendiarism, but not of the murder; why, Kent could not explain. It was over the woman that Kent and Wolcott had the quarrel. He refused to give this third narry's name. Notorious Judd Wolcott Accused of party's name The Present Charge Against Kent.

As to the present charge against Kent, nothing new has developed. Alderman Millar gave him a hearing yesterday morning and remanded him to the care of the federal authorities. Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 11.—Ex-Chief of the United States Secret Service James J. Brooks, died at 4.35 o'clock this morning at his home, No. 1843 Bluff street, Pittsburg. Death was due to heart trouble, the veteran detective having carried for over sixteen years in the sac of his heart a bullet, the result of vindictiveness of violators of the law who were afraid to permit Mr. Brooks to live. Mr. Brooks was in his seventy-second year. His career in his chosen profession covers a most interesting exsecond year. His career in his chosen profession covers a most interesting experience of forty years. He was born in England, coming to the United States when quite young. Mr. Brooks first gained great fame during the whiskey ring's supremacy in Philadelphia. The story of his attempted assassination by hirelings of that clique is most thrilling. Mr. Brooks first is most thrilling. Mr. Brooks first served as chief of the United States se-cret service under President Garfield. He continued at the head of the bureau thirteen years and was permitted the unique and highly gratifying privilege of choosing his own successor, and se-lected A. L. Drummond, now a resi-dent of New York city. Upon leaving the federal service Mr. Brooks became the general manager of Gilkinson's American Detective Bureau, with headquarters in Pittsburg. He was a rare man in character and a thoroughly conscientious Christian, a prominent mem

CROWDED TO THE DOORS.

Black Crook Proved a Great Attraction a Academy of Music.

"The Black Crook" is just the show for Scranton theater-goers, at least it was a great attraction for as many of them as could crowd into the Acad-emy of Music last evening. Every regular attendant of the gallery was there, and had his friends with him. Society was well represented in all parts of the house, and the bald-headed row was at a premium, and was not solely occupied by that class, either.

There was a surfeit of ballet and an abundance of specialties. The efforts of James Marbu in this line were truly wonderful. Miss Made-line Marshall's singing of popular airs was a pleasing and frequent feature be tween the scenes. The ballet of popu-lar airs included the following: The spanish serenaders, musical dolls, the Walhalla spiders and quadrille a la Trilby, all of which were well received. The latter was encored several times. There were other specialties, all wor-thy, but too numerous to mention. Bright scenery and all the appliances required to give good scenic effect were brought into play in the weird incan-tation scenes in the Hartz mountains. There are some of these in each of the four acts, but the greater part of the spectacular production consists of ballet, tableauxs, Amazonian marches and other specialties.
