TRIAL IS REFUSED

Opinion of Judge Archbald in Famous Hand Trespuss Suit.

THAT NOTABLE CASE REVIEWED

Judge Unable to Find Anything That He Thinks Would Worrant Him in Allowing the Plaintiff Another Trial. Extracts from the Opinion.

Judge R. W. Archbald handed down an opinion yesterday refusing a new trial in the notable trespass suit of Dr. D. B. Hand, of this city, against the Central Pennsylvania Telephone company. Dr. Hand sued to recover dam-ages for injuries alleged to have been sustained on September 6, 1889, at West Lackawanna and Ninth street. He was driving up the avenue and at Ninth street his horse stepped on a wire lying on the ground. The animal received an electric shock, was killed and fell to the ground. Dr. Hand left the cariage and tried to raise the animal by taking hold of the bridle. He claimed to have received a shock of electricity that made him very sick at the time and caused him to vomit. From the shock, he alleged, that he was permanently injured, one that he was permanently injured, one of his arms partially paraiyzed. It was maintained that the company was negligent, because its telephone wires should have been guarded to avoid possible contact with a trolley wire or any part of the system connected therewith; because the wire, which fell, was the contact with the contact eaten through by rust; because the company had notice that the wire was down and had sufficient time before the accident occurred in which to have repaired it.

The case took eleven days to try.
Judge Archbald was on the bench.
Mayor Eyerett Warren and Attorney Candor, of Willamsport, defended the company's inferest, and the plaintiff was represented by Attorneys S. B.
Price, C. R. Pitcher, and J. Elliott Ross. There were a large number of medical and electrical experts called upon to testify by the plaintiff and defendant, among them being Prof. fendant, among them being Prof. Thomas B. Lockwood of Boston, recognized as one of the most competent experts on electricity in the United States.

The jury agreed upon a verdict on Tuesday evening, June 19, last year, at 7 o'clock in the evening; it was read in court the next morning. The jury found for the defendant company.

The attorneys for Dr. Hand took steps immediately for a new trial and a rule was granted to show cause why a new trial should not be allowed. The case came up at the following argument court, and the opinion of Judge Archbald was not handed down until yesterday. It is a voluminous document and with the quotations of law and authorities eliminated, is as follows: The jury agreed upon a verdict on

The principal questions raised at the trial and discussed at the argument for a new trial are grouped under these heads. I. As to the evidence rejected. 2. As to the degree of care generally required of the defendant company. 3. As to their alleged negligence with regard to the fall of the wire which caused the accident. 4. As to the charge of the court and the answers to law points.

What the Verdict Meant.

Had the jury found that the company was negligent, they must have found a verdict at least for the value of the horse, however they may have been impressed with regard to the alleged Injuries of the plaintiff personally. The general verdict in favor of the defendant which was rendered can only, therefore, be interpreted as a finding that no negligence on the part of the company was shown, and this eliminates from the case all errors that may have been committed in the rejection of evidence going merely to the question of the injuries to Dr. Hand himself.

Judge Archbald goes on to speak of the rejected testimony of Drs. Wehlau and Dolan and other witnesses. The opinion sets forth that the court is not concerned with what the trolley company, whose wires are charged with a dangerous current of electricity, find it their duty to do to guard those wires from contact with others. The case cannot be looked at from this standpoint. If it has been found necessary by telephone or telegraph companies, whose wires and currents are similar, to put up guard wires to protect them from the more heavily charged wires of street railways it would have been relevant on the part of the plaintiff to show it.

The plaintiff proposed to show that a What the Verdict Meant.

The plaintiff proposed to show that a guard wire was used, but by whom was not specified in the offer. This left it too indefinite to 'missable. The earnest contentior ntiff's counsel at the contentior trial wa-

This rule was not adopted in the instructions given to the jury; on the contrary, they were told that the degree required was only that of ordinary care. Priscipal Ground for Complaint.

One of the principal grounds for present complaint was that the question of the eompany's negligence in not maintaining the wire which broke and fell on the highway was withdrawn from the jury. While it is true that the evidence showed that this wire was badly rusted, it was not shown that it was either originally faulty or that it had remained in place so long that the company ought to have known of its defective condition and removed it.

As was said in the charge to the jury the plaintiff's case was destitute of anything by which to judge of whether the company in this respect had fulfilled its duty. Negligence is a relative term, and is to be proven, not assumed. The defendant company can only be convicted of negligence in case they knew or ought to have known that the wire was in such a defective condition that it should have been taken down. That it was half way rusted through does not necessarily prove it. Professor Lockwood testified that, while the rust undoubtedly affected the tensile strength of the wire, yet its weight would be also reduced by the same process and therewith the strain upon the wire itself. And even Mr. Fern, the plaintiff's own witness, admitted that without a severe shaking it might have stood for years. That the wire broke when subjected to the pressure of the electric light wires which fell on Chestnut street during the storm, establishes nothing.

This might happen to a new wire as well as an old one, and neither can be expected to stand an unexpected strain. But, assuming, for the sake of argument, that rusted as it was, the wire was in a condition to require removal, there was nothing in the trial to show, even with that concession, that the company ought to have known it. No actual knowledge is shown; the plaintiff only said that it was the company's duty to know the insecure condition of the wire and removing it.

Matter of Argument.

It is said that inspecton would have disclosed the defect, but this is more a matter of argument than of proof. Upon this also the plaintiff's case is barren of any thing tangible. It was not shown in what manner or how often wires of this character should be examined; much less is it shown that such examination on the part of the company was wanting. On the contrary, William Neary, one of the linemen and inspectors, said that he passed this place to and from his home on an average once or twice a day, that he always took note of the wires as he went by, and that if they were out of order he would have noticed them. If this was not sufficient.

As was said at the trial, the whole of the proof upon this branch of the case is summed up in the two facts: 1. That the wire broke, 2. That if was not said to through. This may all be true without the defendant's being in any degree negligent, and where the evidence is as consistent with the defendant's care as with the neglect of it, negligence is not proved.

There are several misconceptions of the charge in the reasons assigned for a new trial, for instance, it was not said to the jury that the duty of removing the wire, which was down, depended solely upon the danger to be apprehended; the danger was referred to as one of the size. Matter of Argument.

ments entering into the duty of the de-fendants, but not as alone controlling it. This was called to the attention of the jury. The greater the danger the more promptly would the company be called upon to act, and had this ocen left out of consideration, the planniff might have had just ground of complaint instead of ex-cepting because it was brought into it. The remainder of the opinion is taken up with the discussion of the railned made by the court on the law points submitted by the plaintiff's counsel.

SUPREME COURT SAYS YES.

Case of Joseph Boschino Will Go Before the Highest Tribunal of the State. A writ of certiorari was recived by Clerk of the Courts John H. Thomas yesterday, allowing the appeal for a new trial in the case of Joseph Boschino, the Italian, now in the county jail under sentence of weath for the brutal crime of lying in ambush behind a clump of laurel bushes at Bunker Hill, Dunmore, on Sunday evening, November 11, 1894, and shooting Frank Conforti through the heart when he came along.

Attorney George S. Horn will argue before the Supreme court in January for a new trial for the murderer. Governor Hastings was immediately offi-cially notified of the action of the Su-preme court, and the date of execution, therefore, will not be fixed by the state executive until after the appeal for a new trial is disposed of.

The lower court heard arguments for a new trial and after great considera-tion Judge Gunster, before whom Bos-chino was tried, handed down an opin-ion refusing the appeal. The same day the prisoner was sentenced.

ELM PARK SUPPER.

Was Enjoyed by Many and Was a Pronounced Success.

The ladies of the Elm Park church last night gave their second supper of this season. It was a turkey supper this season. It was a turkey supper and a chrysanthemum supper combined, the one being a feature of the edibles and the other being the flower chiefly used in decorating the tables which were arranged in the lecture room of the church. From 6 to 8 o'clock the tables were occupied to almost their full capacity and a handsome sum was realized.

The committee in charge was composed of Mrs. N. E. Rice, Mrs. Arja Williams, Mrs. Bedford, Mrs. Woolworth, Mrs. Allbaugh, Mrs. Surdam, Mrs. Edgar, Miss Carlyn, Miss Hughes, Mrs. Weed, Mrs. Wentz, and Mrs. Horn. They were assisted by Mrs. C. E.
