A Wagon Struck by the Gravity Cars, but No One Was Hurt.

Ernest Swingle, who keeps a butcher shop on Dundaff street, had a most narrow escape from instant death, his horse and wagon being struck by a Gravity coal train Gravity coal train.

horse and wagon being struck by a Gravity coal train. Mr. Swingle was returning from a trip to South Canaan and was obliged to cross the gravity tracks at Wayne street. Mr. Swingle is a careful man and prudently stopped his horses be-fore they crossed the tracks. It was quite dark and not seeing or hearing anything he concluded the way was clear and urged his horses on. When it was a moment too late he was hor-rified to see a trip of cars but a few feet away and bearing down at a tre-mendous speed. He quickly leaped from the wagon and the next instant it was struck and hurled from the track, being smashed into kindling wood. Swingle escaped with a few bruises, which will be all right in a day or two.

Although hurled from their feet, the Although hurled from their feet, the horses were not hurt, but greatly fright-ened and started down the street at the top of their speed. They slackened their speed somewhat as they attempt-ed to turn from Wayne down Ninth ave-nue and were captured by G.W. Hughes and Thomas Joyce.

The trip proved to be most successful, and he had with him twelve rabbits, four gray squirrels and a large wild cat. The latter weighed eighteen mounds and after it was shot tried to pounds, and after it was shot tried to get at the hunter, but its wounds were too severe. The dog who accompanied the hunter would not attack the will cat, but ran away.

After the reading of the minutes, the street commissioner's time was read and re-ceived. A number of miscellaneous bills were then read and approved of, as were also bills pertaining to the elec-tric plant. It was reported the supply of culm at the Grassy Island dump was nearly ex-hausted. The matter was left to elec-tric light committee. The amendment to the ordinance known as No. 34 was brought up for third and final reading, the amendment being for the purpose of removing the optional feature of the bonds. It was adopted. William Healy, a resident of Dunmore street, was se-verely censured by several of the coun-climen for taking the stone which was taken out by the traction company at the Plane bridge, and placing it upon his property without authority. Two Engines and Te elve Cars a Complete Wreck. On Saturday evening at abor* 8 o'ciock as a coal train was going e 'er the Lehigh Valley cutoff, George IIc, a-man, engineer of the head engine, cut loose from the train to get water at Pickaway water tank, which is about tweive miles from this place. As he did so Engineer James McMekin and Fireman William Sterts kept pushing the train, but on account of the rails being wet they lost control of it and it started back again toward this place. When Engineer McMekin realized his position he reversed his engine and with the fireman went out on the train and commenced putting on the brakes, but to no advantage. As the crew no-ticed the train going faster and faster all the time they deserted it, but Engi-neer McMekin remained putting down brakes as the train sped along, until it reached Cork Lane, where it crashed into a live stock train in charge of Conduc-tor Harvey Hosier, Engineer Comboy and Fireman George Ace. tor Harvey Hosler, Engineer Comboy and Fireman George Ace. The both engines were complete wrecks, being twisted in all shapes. Several cows and sheep were killed, but it is not known how many. Word was sent at once to Coxton and Wilkes-Barre, and in a short time the wreck crews were hard at werk clearing away the smashed engines and cars. It took from 9 o'clock Saturday even-ing until Sunday noon before trains could pass in either direction. Fireman George Ace, when in the act of jumping to escape the crash was caught in some unaccountable manner and had his right arm badly smashed. Several of the road officials were on hand looking afte the work of the crews so as to have the road in operation as quickly as psable. It is thought that the loss will reach about $20,000. Crowds of people from surrounding towns visited the scene of the accident during the day.
