They Tear Up the Squire's Office and the Mayor Fines Them Heavily.

Yesterday morning the Arabs were before the mayor again after they had torn up 'Squire Kirk's office until it looked as though a foot ball game had taken place inside the temple of justice over which 'Squire Kirk rules. Th circumstances are there:

Mike John was charged with perjury and brought before the squire to furnish bail. He was accompanied by Harry Souphey, who went out to look for bondsmen. He returned with a man named Wilcox, who offered the bail.

It seems that the Arabians have two factions. Harry Souphey leads one, Mike Saba the other. When Saba saw that Mike John was not to b jailed he denounced Souphey in the Arabian tongue. The argument resolved itself into a fair representation of a foot ball game. The stove was broken and the furniture was destroyed, and 'Squire Kirk's office looked like a demolished bar room. Souphey was bruised, his clothes torn and his pocketCook containing $30 he alleger was stoley. He accused Mike Simon, John and Effas Saba and John George of assaulting and robbing him, and John Kearney, the grocer, of beating him with a stick. Mike John corroborated all this.

P. A. O'Boyle represented the prose entor and P. M. Thornton the defense The mayor fined them each $50 and costs, and held the whole mess for court in $500 ball. Mr. Kearney went on their bond, and they were released

HURT IN THE MINES.

Accidents of a Day in the Underground

Workings. orning, Michael Garman driver in the Empire shaft, had his arm broken by falling from a car. He was caught between the car and a prop and it was by a lucky chance that he was not killed. John Slovola, a Polander, was badly burned about the face and hands in the Alden mine yesterday. He was taken to the city hospital, where his injuries were properly treated.

Henry Alger, a miner, about fifty years of age, was caught and instantly killed yesterday morning in the Avoca Coal company's mines by a fall of top rock. Six years ago Mr. Alger me with a similar accident in the same mine, and had one leg so badly crushed that it was subsequently amputated. He leaves a widow and seven small children.

A Fox Hunt Awheel.

The Wilkes-Barre wheelmen had fox hunt on Tuesday night. At 10 o'clock the fox, which part was taken by Ben Connors, was released from the club house, and was allowed to run about wherever he wished in the ter-Washington and Academy streets. The hounds were divided into two packs, one led by George Pelfer, and the other by U. N. Perry.

Three minutes after the fox left th club house the first pack of hounds started in the chase, and when they were out of sight, the second pack tool up the hunt in a different direction There was some lively riding, but th moon shinning so brightly and the streets being nearly empty made the riding safe.

The fox pessed the first sentinel and was just about to pass the second when he had a puncture, and was com-pelled to hide. The second pack of hounds were on the scent and found the fox near the mill on Union street just about five minutes before he was due at the club house. The chase last-ed twenty minutes, and five and a half miles were covered. Dan Bebee was starter, and Charles l'elfer and Jesse Boyd were judges and tinesta.

The prison commissioners met in their usual monthly session yesterday, and inspected the jail. They found every-

AVOCA.

Harry Alger, one of the most respect ed citizens of the town, met with a sad death yesterday afternoon while engaged in his duties as a miner in the Avoca colliery. His death was caused by a heavy fall of roof, which buried him completely, mangling his body in a horrible manner. The remains were re-moved to his home, a short distance away. It was a pitiable sight to behold his grief-stricken wife and seven small children mourning after the husband and father. Mr. Alger was an indus-trious and law-abiding citizen. He was a member of Sons of St. George and the Colliery Association Fund. Funeral announcement will be made

GEORGE ELIOT ASSAILED.

The Character of a Woman Novelist Dis sected by a Woman Essayist-Under bred and Provincial, Success and Adulation Spoil Her and Robbed Her of Her Beautiful Simplicity and Sincerity of

It has often been said—by persons with a taste for the piquant—that the best biographer of an eminent man or woman would be, not a friend or symmetry of the other states. woman would be, not a friend or sym-pathizer, but someone "on the other side." What the result should be of such an arrangement may be seen by an article—all too short—in the Woman at Home, in which Mrs. Lynn Linton sets forth, in "A First Meeting with George Ellot," her estimation of that lady. Underbred and Provincial.

After passing in brisk review some

After passing in brisk review some score of other eminent women whom Mrs. Lynn Linton has met at one time or another, she says:

It was at John Chapman's that I first met George Eliot—then Marian Evans, having adopted neither her pseudonym nor her style and title of George Lewes' wife. "Confession is good for the soul," they say; and I will candidly confess ay short-sighted prejudices with respect to this—to be—celebrated person. These were her undeveloped as well as her insurgent days. She was known to be learned, industrious, thoughtful, noteworthy; but she was not yet the Great Genius of her age, nor a philosopher bracketed with Plato and Kant, nor was her personality held to be superior to the law of the land, nor was she recognized as a conventional gentleperior to the law of the land, nor was she recognized as a conventional gentle-woman—in those days, indeed, she was emphatically not that. She was essen-tially underbred and provincial. She held her hands and arms kangaroo fashion; was badly dressed; had an un-washed, unbrushed, unkempt look alte-gether; and she assumed a tone of superiority over me which I was not then aware was warranted by her unhen aware was warranted by her un-

A Glimpse Into the "Card Horse." Still, this closer acquaintanceship came about later on, after Marian Evans' "flight with George Lewes." Considering all things, it is rather mag-nificent of Mrs. Lynn Linton to confess that she called on them, "by their joint request," for, at the end of her article, she has nothing but blame for this marriage with George Lewes, which "fell in-to ruins like the card-house which in reality the whole thing was." But the first impression of George Ellot in her card-house is a pleasing one:

They were in lodgings in St. John's Wood, and the aureole of their new love was around them. There was none of the pretense of a sanctioned union which came afterwards—none of the some-what pretentious assumption of super-ior morality which was born of her success. She was frank, genial, natural and brimful of happiness. The con-sciousness that she had finally made her choice and cast the die which de-termined her fate gave her a nobility of expression and a grandeur of bearing which she had not had when I first "Artificial, Prententlous, Unreal." Mrs. Lynn Linton then loved, honred and admired her. But not for

Had she always remained on that Had she always remained on that level she would have been the grandest woman of this or any other age. But success and adulation spoilt her, and destroyed all simplicity, all sincerity of character. She grew to be artificial, posee, pretentious, unreal. She lived an unreal life all through, bothmentally and socially; and in her endeavor to harmonize two irreconcliables—to be at harmonize two irreconcilables-to be at once conventional and insurgent—the upholder of the sanctity of marriage whileliving as the wife of a married man—the self-reliant law-breaker and the eager postulant for the recognition granted only to the covenanted—she lost every trace of that finer freedom and whole-heartedness which has been so remarkable in the beginning of her connection with Lewes. She was a made woman—not in the French sense—but made by self manipulation, as one makes a statue or a vase. I have never known anyone who seemed to me so purely artificial as George Ellot.

She took a fine type for imitation; but the result was not a flesh-and-blood woman. Not a line of spontaneity was left in her......Never for one instant did she forgot her self-created selfnever did she throw aside the trappings or the airs of the benign Sibyl. Her soft low voice was pitched in one level the eager whose flint was already fired. Her gestures were as measured as her words; her attitudes as restrained as her tones. She was so consciously "George Ellot"—so interpenetrated head and heel, inside and out, with the sense of her importance, as the great novelist and profound thinker of her generation, as to make her society a little overwhelming, leaving on base creatures the impression of having been rolled very flat, indeed.

"Jealous and Exacting." Among the other indictments which Mrs. Lynn Linton brings against George Eliot—there are a good many more in the two pages devoted to the subject—is this:

With all her studied restraint of manner, George Eliot had a large amount of what the French call temamount of what the French can be the perament. As a lover she was both jealous and exacting, and the "farfallone amoroso" whom she had captured was brought pretty tautly to his bearwas brought pretty tauty to his bearings. If even he went so far as Birmingham to lecture, he had to return home that night—as she guite gravely said to a lady in my presence:
"I should not think of allowing

HEALING BY HAND.

From the Chicago Times-Herald. From the Chicago Times-Herald.

That there are more things in heaven and earth than were ever dreamed of in the Horatian philosophy we have daily and almost hourly witness, and in nothing so clear or so convincing as in the healing of the sick and the making the iame to walk under such influences as that which the healer Schlatter exerts. Call it quackery, call it delusion, call it thaumaturgy or what not, the facts are indisputable that cures have been effected under his ministrations. And not under his only but in thousands of other cases and circumstances, so that in our under his only but in thousands of other cases and circumstances, so that in our own boasted "age of science," when every proposition must be brought to the test of absolute proof and all strange and unaccounted-for phenomena are relegated to the realm of deception, supersition and credulity, we are forced to the conclusion that the scientists and philosophers have yet a good many things to fathom. The people have the proofs, though they may not be demonstrable to the man of science. When a sick man arises from his bed, or a paralytic walks and once more resumes control over his limbs and speech, it is no delusion to him, whatever it may be to the spectator.

Nor are these things new, nor to the eye of reason are they absurd. Since the days of Galen the influence of mind upon the body has always been recognized. The successful medical practitioner is the man who possesses certain subtle gifts and powers and carries with him into the sick obambus sunshine, faith, patience and hope. He adds as much mystery as possible to his beating, and even in the writing of a prescription appeals to Jupiter to help him. The cabalistic letter that every young "taw-bonter" is instructed to use at the beginning of his recipe is the asirylogical sign of Jupiter, and every reader of "Marti Califf" will remember hew Charles Reade st one time.

Since, therefore, the medical profession itself recognizes the influence that the mind or the imagination exerts over the aliments of the body, ought they not to be more frank in its recognition? When the physicians say, as they do say, that worry, care, anxiety and disappointment will produce disease, why should they not also acknowledge that cheerfulness. happiness and confidence will bring back health? Nor must the power of mind over mind be overlooked. This field is a wide one and to a great extent unknown. How far hypnotism is proved may be still a question, but that mind operates on mind is a fact too well substantiated for further skepticism. Schlatter and his like are also facts, and it will not do to tilt the nose in mere derision when the cures they bring about are mentioned.
