BOLD DESERTER.

The war wasn't much of a bother to Hillsborough, for the town was remote from the field of operations. Occa-sionally news' would come that made the women cry out and the old men weep, but the intervals were long be-tween these episodes, and to all appear-ances affairs moved forward as serene-

If as ever.

This was during the first year or two of the struggle. Then came the impressment law, which created bad feelings and caused a good deal of grumbling. Following this came the conscript act, which made matters much worse, especially when strange men were sent to enforce it. This disturbed the serenity of Hillsborough very seriously.

Nevertheless, Hillsborough could have put up with the conscript act but for one event that stirred the little community from center to circumference. The conscript officers had not been in the town a week before they pounced upon little Billy Cochran, the sole support of his widowed mother, who was known throughout that region as Aunt Cathe. Little Bills blowed was a New 2 N Sally. Little Billy himself was a puz-zle to the more thoughtful people. He was so simple and innocent-minded, so ready to do for others what he wouldn't do for himself, that some said he was a half-wit, while others contended that a half-wit, while others contended that he would have sense enough if his heart wasn't so big.

But everybody liked little Billy—for his mother's sake, if not for his own, for Aunt Sally was, indeed, a Good Samaritan. She seemed to know by instinct where trouble and sickness and suffering were to be found, and there, too, she was to be found, and there, too, she was to be found. High or low, rich or poor, she pased none by. And, though she was simple and as innocent-minded as little Billy, these qualities seemed to fit her better than they did her awkward and bashful boy.

Aunt Sally and little Billy were both as industrious as the day was long, yet they made but a precarious living on Aunt Sally would take no pay for nursing the sick, no matter how much of her time was taken up, but she supplemented the meagre income they got from the one-horse farm by making quilts and counterpanes, and bedspreads, and by taking weaving, being very expert at the loom.

"Now, if you'll tell me how all this concerns you," said the officer, bristling up. "I'il be much obliged to you."

The major took one step forward and, with a movement quick as lightning, slapped the officer in the face with his open hand. "That's for little Billy!" he exclaimed.

The officer sprang back and placed his hand under his coat as if to draw pistol. The major whipped out a big morocco pocketbook, fumbled about it a moment, and then threw five 20-

As may be supposed, Aunt Sally and little Billy didn't wear fine clothes nor put on any airs. Living in middle Georgia, (the most damage). "I'll send that to your family." he Georgia, (the most democratic region, socially, in the world), they had no need for either the one or the other. They made a bare living, and were tolerably satisfied with that.

One day, shortly after the conscript officer had established his headquarters in Hillsborough, Aunt Sally and little Billy drove into town with a few dozen eggs and three or four chickens to sell. The conscript officer, sitting on the veranda of the tavern, noticed that little Billy was a well grown lad, and kept his eye on him, as the rickety, one-horse wagon came through the public square.

There were two or three loungers sitting on the veranda, including Major Goolsby. One of them tapped the major on the shoulder and pointed to little Billy with his forefinger and the conscript officer with his thumb. The major pedded gravely once or twice major nodded gravely once or twice, and presently hitched his chair closer to the conscript officer.

"You ain't a-baggin' much game in these parts, I reckon," said the major, addressing the officer, with half-closed eyes.

"Business is not very good." replied the other with a chuckle, "but we man-age to pick up a few stragglers now and then. Yonder's a chap now"—point-ing to little Billy—"that looks like he would be an ornament to the rear guard in an engagement." The officer was a big. rough-looking man, and seemed to find his present duties very agreeable.

Do you mean little Billy Cochran?"

inquired the major.
"I don't know his name," said the of-ficer. "I mean that chap riding in the "That boy." remarked the major, with an emphasis that caused the conscript officer to regard him with surprise," is the sole support of his mother. He's all she's got to make her crop."

"Maybe so," the officer said, "but the law makes no provision for cases of that kind." "You said 'maybe so,' " suggested the major. "Do you mean to doubt my word?" His voice was as soft as the notes of a flute.

"Why, certainly not!" exclaimed the officer, flushing a little.

The major made no further remark, but sat bolt upright in his chair. The but sat bolt upright in his chair. The rickety wagon drove to the tavern door, and little Billy got out, a basket of eggs in one hand and the chickens in the other. He went into the tavern, and while he was gone. Aunt Sally passed the day after tomorrow. The army needs your services."

"Do you want me to go to the war?" asked little Billy, a quaver in his voice. "Yes," the officer replied. "You fall under the conscript law."

"Yes." replied the husband sadly.

"Far?" inquired the stranger.

"Only a few blocks to make a call," answered the husband.

"Only a few blocks!" exclaimed the stranger. "Why, from your preparations I thought you expected to encounter some great danger."

"We have to cross a trolley car track both going and coming," replied the husband with quiet determination.

HIS "OLD WOMAN."

She Was No New Woman, But She Knew How to Run Her Husband Around From the New York World. She was small and wiry and maybe

40. She did not pose as a new woman-in fact, "he" called her the "old woman," She di not wear bloomers. She wore a calleo dress, skimmy in the skirt and ragged at the elbows and her whisp of hair was done up in a hard knot at the back of her head. There was a certain 'set" to her sharp chin as she turned the corner of Third avenue and saw him leaning against the lamp post which was ominous. He saw her coming. "There's the "old woman," he said, and slipped into the side door. A minute later she walked in at the family entrance. What happened within is not history. "Dinner on the table," she was saying, as she drove him before her through the side door into the cold world, "since 11 o'clock!" and her voice went up an octave. "You-good-for-nothing loafer! You

-you"-she went on shrilly, embarrassed as to epithets by the richness of his deserving. "He" was large and lumbering and neekeyed. He slouched hastily through the gathering crowd, but the "old woman" followed. "Lemme 'lone!" he protested, as she took him by the slack of his coat and headed him in the opposite direction. I say I ain't a-goin!" "You say!" she shricked, derisively.

'I say you be! Git!" She propelled him several feet forward. He stopped and looked around hesitatingly. "I ain't a-goin' home, I say, to be jawed at!" She marched him forward. When he stopped a volly of words goaded him on. Large and lumbering and meek-eyed he slouched unwillingly at the head of the procession, with half the neighborhood in the rear. A policeman stood on the far corner

"There's the woman for you!" he commented, cheerfully. "A few more like that would be worth a dozen police for

TO OUR PATRONS:

Washburn-Crosby Co. wish to assure their many patrons that they will this year hold to their usual customs of milling STRICTLY OLD WHEAT until the new crop is fully cured. New wheat is now upon the market, and owing to the excessively dry weather many millers are of the opinion that it is already cured, and in proper condition for milling. Washburn-Crosby Co. will take no risks, and will allow the new wheat fully three months to mature before grinding.

This careful attention to every detail of milling has placed Washburn-Crosby Co.'s flour far above other brands.
