NELSON DINGLEY, JR.

Something About the New Republican Leader on the Floor of the National House of Representatives.

McFarland, in Philadelphia Record. Nelson Dingley, jr., commonly called Governor Dingley, because he was governor of Maine twenty years ago, is recognized in Washington as the ablest man in the house after Speaker Reed and as having more information about public questions and the facts behind them, especially those of finance, inthe tariff, than the speaker Those New York newspapers which send exploring parties of young men down here to discover congress every two years do not seem to understand Governor Dingley's position in the house much better than they do some other things in Washington. One of them published the other day a photoof Representative Sereno E., of New York, and labeled it "The Financier of the Republican Par-ty," but I suppose he never heard of Senator Sherman, much less of Governor Dingley. However, everybody who Dingley has no superior as a financier in either branch unless it be John Sher

The Most Modest of Men

Governor Dingley is one of the most modest of men. This modesty of his is one of the reasons why he is not as well appreciated by the country generally as by his colleagues in congress and his neighbors in New England. He s the last man in the house to do showy things. He never "played to the gal-leries" or talked for "buncombe," and on the contrary he has sat quietly by while other men did it on intellectual without interest and without hope of epayment. He never speaks except for the purpose of informing or persuading the house and only at what he regards as he command of duty. But as he sits in his seat or in his study at his hotel his colleagues will come to him for ideas and for information which they need r use in debate or in speechmaking, that if all the speeches he has thus nade by proxy were placed to his ac-ount it would be found that he was most prolific man in congress. tee on appopriations and quite as true In the committee on banking and cur-rency, he has had no equal in recent years in the debate at short range. which goes on in a conversational way during the private consideration of a bill. And on the floor, in spite of the fact that he is not a great orator, he has held his own ngainst all opponents with whom he has crossed swords. Of course, it is not only his sagacity and dexterity in the use of his arms and ammunition, but his fine and true per-sonal character, which gives him the great weight he has with as colleagues in committee and in the house. They know that he is absolutely honest, intellectually and morally, and they recognize, too, a confident courage which stands upon settled convictions. Governor Dingley is one of the men who are equally well known as Chris-tians and as statesmen, without suffer-ing the slightest touch of that sugges-tion of reproach which the words and deeds of some hypocrites brought upon the phrase Christian statesman a quar-ter of a century ago. This is because, of course, that he is a consistent Chris-tian and therefore an upright states-man. He was not one man when presid-ing over the National convention of the Congregationalists last summer, and another man when he came to Washington to take his seat in congress; but the same true man in both places.

His Colleagues Respect Him There are a good many men who leave their religion at home when they come to congress, or shake it off after they get here; but Governor Dingley is not that kind of a man, and he is not only as regular in his church duties here as in his home in Lewiston, but what is far better, he is as faithful in his daily living. And in his case as in every such case his colleagues, most of them men of the world, and not even nominal Christians in any strict sense of the word, pay him that tribute of respect which his honest life exacts. It is easy to account for the modesty, the fidelity and the generosity which have charac-terized Governor Dingley's congression-al career in all his dealings with the men about him when you know what rules his life.

Governor Dingley impresses most peo ple as being a very serious man and he is not a man of quip and joke, nor Leader's Price, 49c does he spend much time in frivolous conversation, but he has a sense of humor and likes a funny story, if it is clean and not as broad as it is long, just as much as anybody. But he has a grave manner as of a man who has serious business in hand and who does not look upon life as a jest. And doubtess this is another reason why men have such confidence in him. Governor Dingley is generally supposed to be a lawyer and so he is by education, for after he was graduated at Dartmouth college in the class of 1855 he studied law and was admitted to the bar and ever since he has kept up his legal studies while much of the time he has been making law either in his state legislature or in congress, or as the governor of Maine.

He Is a Journalist. But his profession is journalism, for since 1856 he has been chief proprietor and editor of the Lewiston Journal, the Maine newspaper having the largest circulation and perhaps the most influence in the state, and through all his political career, which began when he was elected to the legislature in 1862, he has kept his hand on the helm of the Journal with all the pride and interest which a journalist feels in his newspaper. Here in Washington he has been a sort of editorial correspondent for his paper, which has had the ad-vantage of his wisdom and his infor-mation in its discussion of public affairs. A thorough newspaper man, him-self, he has the kindliest and most sym-pathetic feeling for all reputable newspathetic feeling for all reputable news-paper men and there is probably not one in Washington who is not under obliga-tions to him for some thoughtful and helpful act in the line of their work. His treasures of information are at their command and so are his accurate and of them. I venture to say, ever appealed to him in vain, when it was possible for him to do what he was asked And I will also venture to say that the respect and regard which are felt for him by his colleagues in conpress. The fact is Governor Dingley is courteous and considerate in his deal-ings with everybody, and everybody, so far as I know, has the same feeling of regard and respect for him.

llis Personal Appearance

The governor is of medium height. with a scholar's stoop and spare figure as vigorous physically as he is intellectually. He has a well-rounded head covered with black hair. He has a short black beard, beginning to turn grey, and his complexion is dark, that strangers sometimes think he loo like a Spanish Jew. His eye is keen and man's, and his fine living appears in his countenance. His pictures, as a rule do him gross injustice, but that is because they fall to give his expression, which

s so pleasing. He dresses well.

Here in Washington he has lived for ears at the Hamilton house, a family hotel on Franklin Square, where Sena tor and Mrs. Frye and Representative Boutelle and his daughters and other Maine people also live in the winter. Mrs. Dingley is here a good deal of the time and usually some of the govern-or's children, for he has several sons and daughters.

The governor takes his recreatin in walking briskly to and from the capitol every day. Most of his time is spent in hard work either at his committee room or in the house or in his den at his deasant apartments. He is not a society man in any sense and only goes to dinners when he has to. But he ance in Washington and is as popular with the leaders of the Democratic party as with the leaders of his own

President Cleveland or Secretary Carlisle would consult him as freely and as confidentially as they would any other man in congress and would be as confident of his patriotic desire to serve his country regardless of partisan advantage as in the case of any other public man whatever.

This is one of the many reasons which marked him as better fitted to be chairman of the ways and means committee by far than any other man in the Clerical Slips.

A clergyman in England, pleading earnestly with his parishioners for the construction of a cemetery for their parish, asked them to consider the "deplorable condition of 20,000 Englishmen living without Christian burial." Still more curious was another clerical slip. A gentleman said to a minister: "When do you expect to see Deacon S. again?" "Never!" said the reverend gentleman, solemnly; "the deacon is in heaven."—The Presbyterian Observer.

STOCKS AND BONDS.

New York, Dec. 21.—Wall street was in a waiting day and dealing at the Stock Exchange footed only 15,000 shares. The under tone of the market was stronger than for a week and considerably higher figures wer recorded for the leading issues. The strength of the market was the general arrangements for placing a big block of 4 per cent, bonds wit hnew York bankers. All the indications favored the idea that the issue will be $100,000,000, the purchasing syndicate to receive an option for $100,000,000 additional. The leading banks were sounded as to their position in the matter of the amount of gold they could furnish, etc., etc. In fact the belief in a bond issue was so strong that lower cables from London were received and the trend of prices for stocks, except for a slight hesitancy at the opening was upward throughout.

The gain ranged from ½ to 2½, the most prominent being in Chicago Gas, Sugar, Louisville and Nashville, the Grangers, the Vanderblits, Western Union, Tennessee Coal. Sugar was in demand on the further advance in refined. Speculation closed strong with prices at or near the best figures of the day.
