New York, Feb. 13.-Edward Thompson, a consulting electrical engi-neer, who has been experimenting with Professor Roentgen's discovery, add today that he had discovered a process whereby motion, otherwise invisible, might be observed with the use of the new X rays The movements of a watch can be observed through the case, and the operation of the interior case, and the operation of the interior organs of a living human being or ani-mal be made visible. The value of such a discovery to the science of surgery and medicine may be imagined from the claim of the in-ventor, when it is said that with it the action of the heart and the digestion of food can be observed food can be observed.

The Discoverer's Explanation-

The Discoverer's Explanation. "In the process as carried out by Roentgen, the effect of the cathode rays after passing through opaque objects must be developed by photography, and therefore a great deal of time is occu-pled by the exposure and the obtaining of the picture," says Mr. Thompson. "By my process it is intended that objects ordinarily invisible may be ex-amined instantly, and especially that motion may be represented to the eye. "Again with powerful rays it ought to be possible with this process to see the action of muscles and joints when one's finger is bent; or to be able to distin-guish a sprain from a break by move-ing the arm back and forth; or to see the circulation of the blod, the beating of the heart and the motion of sap in of the heart and the motion of sap in trees and plants and of all other objects which at present cannot be observed.

"Photography is not used in any con-nection with these experiments, and the figures which you observe are made by throwing the shadows of the invisible moving particles by the X-rays upon platinocyanide in the end of a dark

Ilis Birthplace from Mortgalees.

Hamilton, Mich., Feb. 13.-After an absence of nearly twelve years Frank Thornleigh has returned to his old Thornleigh has returned to his old home in Allegan county. When Frank was a lad his mother died, and in a few weeks his father married a widow who was still in mourning for her dead husband. Frank, a high-spirited lad, could not get along with his step-mother, and on the morning of his tweifth birthday his bed was found un-touched, and the boy, with his few lit-tle belongings, was missing. When Frank ran away he shipped as a cabin boy at St. Joseph, and made friends with an old gentleman who was going to lower Canada to buy horses. About a year ago the old gentleman died, leaving Frank sole heir to oyer fied, leaving Frank sole heir to over $50,000. A desire to see his old father drove Frank back to Michigan, and he arrived most opportunely. The old gentleman had spent much money to find his son, and Frank's coming was just in time to save the old home from being wiped out by a mortgage.
