SEVEN PEOPLE FOUND IT EASY YESTERDAY To buy Pianos and Organs from us. They paid a few dollars down, and we carried the balance for as many years as they want till all is paid. You know, of course, that this is rather an extraordinary way of selling instruments. It means a large amount of outlying capital, but after twenty years of successful business we can stand that, as our one desire is to get rid of our immense stock before the 29th day of this month. If we get our price we're well contented, but the fact is many instruments are going for less money than it cost to build them, and it's just because we must either sell or send them to a storage warehouse, and we positively will not do the latter.

GOOD SECOND-HAND INSTRUMENTS FOR VERY LITTLE MONEY.

JOINT SESSION OF COUNCILS.

A $20,000 Contract for Bridges Awarded. The Main Concrete Style of Bridge Chosen - Mayor Hendrick Displays Wonderful Knowledge.

The council chamber, in the municipal building, presented a very interesting session Monday night, councilmen could be seen fitting to and fro, groups were eagerly discussing the situation, and the public had assembled in great numbers to see and hear the report of the mayor and his party upon their inspection tour to investigate the bridges. The chairman, C. E. Spencer, called the adjourned meeting of councils to order, and said in effect that the meeting had been adjourned on Tuesday evening, when the bids for Salem, Sixth and the Eighth avenue bridges were opened and further action deferred pending investigation of certain points not quite clear.

H. G. Baker introduced the following resolution: "That the plans and specifications of the Main arch style of bridge constructed as proposed by the city engineer be adopted for the bridges to be constructed at Salem avenue, Sixth avenue and Eighth avenue, city of Carbondale, Pa. Kaseb seconded the resolution. P. G. McDonough argued that the plans for both styles be considered together, not one now and the other again. He wished to see the best interests of the city all people ought to be treated alike.

The chairman thought it perfectly proper to adopt the plan. F. W. Mills—Does that accept the bid? The chairman emphatically said no. No motion to the effect spoken of by Mr. McDonough was made.

Then the chairman upon calling for the generosity of the mayor and the trouble he had taken to investigate the style of Main bridges in Newark and Jersey City.

Mayor Hendrick said in substance: "Mr. chairman and gentlemen of the councils, I should like first to say my respects to the sun-of-a-gun who is the author of that article in Monday's Scranton Tribune, which I presume you have all seen." Then he said very complimentary terms to vent his soreness at being properly exposed.

He gave a resume of his visit of inspection and he stated that on Tuesday evening he was satisfied which style was the better bridge. He decided as his own expense to pay a visit and see for himself. He said that the steel bridge men had told him some fairy tales, as they doubtless did others. They said concrete bridges would not stand the climate and that there was no concrete bridges in the world. But the mayor, in his wonderful knowledge, knew that there were plenty of them, and he knew that the steel bridge in Jersey City and he resolved to go and see them. One concrete bridge, carrying two street car tracks, built since the war, thirty years ago, had not a crack in its steel structure. It was placed on the old foundation which is still as firm as ever. Then if a stone bridge had been built with that foundation it would have been there yet. To this concrete structure there is no vibration. It is like the everlasting hills. Then he favorably commented on the bridge at Prospect park, Brooklyn, and in a small Jersey town, and concluded by saying that as far as his investigation was concerned, he was convinced that the concrete bridge was the best they could build.

The mayor after this preface, followed concrete to the hilt for ten days, and treated the councilmen with a lecture gleaned from encyclopedias and civil engineering manuals, which he called authorities. He referred to the Roman pantheon, to a bridge in Wales, built 1500 years ago, and aqueducts still supplying Rome with water. Then he said that the bridge is built largely of labor employed there. They being the steel and cement. We furnish everything else. The bridge company will work between the concrete and steel, at contract price in this city. He predicted hard times to the workmen of this city owing to the continuation of the coal seasons. The money is needed in the city.

Select Councilman McNulty said he had not much to say, that he knew very little about cement or iron. He had tested the Jersey City bridge and found no vibration.

P. G. McDonough thought the bridge was a remarkably good bridge, and depends on a good foundation, though, if it were to settle the bridge will be a total wreck. The bridges he had seen were in good order. Messrs. Glenn, Dilts and Colven concurred that they were nice bridges. Mr. Baker said, "as far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I don't necessary for me to see a thing. I am convinced. I have looked up the subject in the encyclopedias and such
