Senator Blackburn was in the crowd $1.00 more than a mere conference to consider the registrative needs of cities of the third class. It is a step and an important one toward the recognition of the principles of municipal home rule which has been fruitful of results in other states. No mat-ter what the ultimate outcome of the la-bors of delegates may be, we have here a definite assertion of the principles that the communities are the primary and most competent judges as to the needs both as to the form of government and scope of activity. It requires no deep insight into the history of municipal leg-islation in this commonwealth, especiality as regards the larger cities to convince one that this principle has not received anything like recognition. The classic in-stance, of course, is in the government of the first class, but the same has been true to a greater or less extent of cities of the second and third class. The prob-lam we have before us is to give to our municipalities a definite place in the politi-cal system of the state, and to so frame legislation as to make it adaptable to committees of various sizes. All political experience points to the fact that as regards governmental organization, the needs of a community with a population of 10,000, and one with a population of 10,000, and one with a population of 10,000, are radically different. The same is frue of the methods of procedure in the carrying out of municipal functions. The safeguaries to be provided in the lat-ter case, owing to the harger interests at stake, and the great difficulty of carrful supervision, must be far more minute and ravine. ter case, owing to the larger interests at stake, and the great difficulty of careful supervision, must be far more minute and carefully prescribed. Again in the scope of municipal activity, the problems in a city with a population of 100,000, call for additional powers and more complicated machinery as well as nicer adjustment of the relations between municipal author-ities than is the case in othes with a population of 1000. The history of muni-cipal legislation in the United States, as well as in Europe, clearly shows that these necessities of legislation will de-mand recognition in spite of constitution at and other limitations. An excellent flus-tration of this fact is in the history of lo-cal and special legislation in the United States and more especially in Penasylva-nia.
