TWO MIGHTY LLEWELYNS

The Paithful Gelert Slaughtered by His Enraged Master.

SELF-GOVERNMENT FOR WALES

Sir John Jones Jenkius Remarks that the Tin-Plate Trade Has Left Wales and Warns Them to Protect the Home Market.

Llewelyn ab Iorwerth came to the sovereignty of North Wales in the year 1194. In 1204 he married Joan, daughter of John, king of England, who made him a present of a very fine greyhound, which he named Gelert. One day, when the Welsh prince and his nobles were mounted for the chase, Gelert could not be found, so they had to set without him. On his return home the prince, as was his custom, went immediately to caress his infant, but was horror-stricken on discovering the cradle overturned, the clothes smeared with blood, and the child not to be seen. The dog, the favorite Gelert, who had been missing from the field, sprang forter of John, king of England, who made been missing from the field, sprang for-ward to welcome his master, with jaws covered with blood. The prince at once concluded from his appearance that he must have killed the child, and drew his dagger, and in his rage killed him; but on further search to discover the child the prince was joyfully surprised to find him wrapped in his bedcitohes and fast asleep. The cradle was upset, and not far distant he found the dead body of a wolf, which had been slain by the faithful Gelert to had been slain by the faithful Gelert to save the infant. Llewelyn mourned sincerely the rash act in destroying such a faithful friend and companion, and as a tribute to his memory built a church over the grave and a monastery near the place as a plous offering of gratitude for the preservation of his heloved son, and called it from this distressing circumstance Bedd Gelert— Gelert's Grave. The viliage is still called by that name; it is situated in Carnaryonshire, in a small valley near the Snowden mountain; and from this incident is derived the Welsh proverb: "Yr wyf mor edifar a'r gwr a laddodd ei filgi," (I am as sorry as the man who el fligi," (I am as sorry as the man who slew his greyhound.) Llewelyn ab Lorwerth, through a reign of forty-six years, supported a character distinguished for enterprise and bravery; he has been highly celebrated by his contemporary bards, whom they called Llewelyn the Great. Llywarch Brydydd y Moch, in his poem to him writes: "A noble lion, the Governor of Britain and her defense. Llewelyn, numerous and her defense. Llewelyn, numerous are thy battles, thou brave prince of the mighty, that puttest the enemy to flight. He is a prince with terrible looks, who will conquer in foreign countries, as well as in Mona, the mother of all Wales."

Llewelyn ab Graffydd, the last prince of Wales reigned from 15th to 132 and of Wales, reigned from 1254 to 1282, and fell in resisting the ambition of Ed-ward II., king of England, to reduce the whole island to his sway; and with him periahed the name of the Welsh as an independent nation upon the face of the earth. The whole reign of this prince was spent in warfare with the English, during which was displayed a terrible tissue of conspiracies and bloodshed: and for two years after the death of "Liewelyn ein Llyw Olaf" the regal power of Wales was irrevocably annihi-lated. There is another Prince Liewellated. There is another Prince Llewelyn who preceded the former named Llewelyn ab Sitsylit. He was a most distinguished prince, and is said to have married when only 14 years of age. He succeeded to the principalities of South Wales and Powys, in 998, and seventeen years later he asserted his claim to that of North Wales. From the year 3015 to 1021 he governed the whole of Wales. He fell in battle through the treachery of a bishop named Madog Main.

Cambria lodge, the secretary of the Cambria lodge, the mother lodge of the order in Wales. As portraits are only inserted in the magazine after a vote of the whole delegates at the A. M. C., this is an honor of which Brother Lake may well feel proud. He is a "Swan-sea boy," born at High street, Dec. 7, 1835. Left an orphan when 8 years of age, he went to the Hafod copper works, where he cleaned bricks and ran errands at four shillings per week. Then passing through the blacksmith shop he became foreman of the Silver works, so recently made famous by the "Sarti" robbery. Soon after the forma-tion of the Swansea school board he was appointed attendance officer, a powas appointed attendance officer, a po-sition he still holds. For twenty-one years he has been secretary of the Cam-brian lodge, which has increased in membership from 650 to 800. He has often attended as delegate to the A. M. C., and at the Stafford A. M. C. in 1886 he succeeded in getting the leek inserted in the emblem of the order, where, until then, only the rose, the Shamrock, and the thistle appeared.

SELF-GOVERNMENT FOR WALES. lied ting into operation the provision of the local government act which would enable Wales to set up a national counding ficulty in showing how the devotion of business would benefit Wales, but one must confess that it was with some surprise that one listened to the sympathetic tone in which Mr. Chaplin referred to so revolutionary (?) a proposal. Can it be, after all, that the first practical steps for the solution of the front conservative by the same of the state of the sympathetic tone will come. The sympathetic tone in which Mr. Chaplin referred to so revolutionary (?) a proposal. Can it be, after all, that the first practical steps for the solution of the front conservative by the same of the world. But they amed to Germany, France and Spain. He therefore looked upon the tinning department of the trade to have departed from them for a long time to come. He could not see that it had altogether departed, because they used a large quantity in their own country. They must take care to retain that trade, otherwise they might open the solution of the departed, because they used a large quantity in their own country. THE WELSH IN PARLIAMENT. The writer of the "Notes from Wales" n one of the Liverpool newspapers who, it is said, is intimately associated with parliamentary life, complains of the perfunctory attendance given by the majority of the Welsh members to the perfunctory attendance given by the majority of the Welsh members to their parliamentary duties, even when those duties involve questions of the greatest interest to Wales. Within the last week or two several subjects of of deep importance to Wales have been discussed in the house of commons, but Wales was represented by four, or at most five, members during almost the whole of the debate. The battle for the Pembroke naval dock yard was left entirely to two North Wales members. The same two members again dealt with the all-important question of a national council for Wales to the extent of eliciting quite a sympathetic reply from Mr. Henry Chaplin. They were joined by one or two others in the discussion of the injustice meted out to certain witnesses who appeared before the land commission, but the force of the Welsh party was never at any time in evidence. Mr. Evenmor before the land commission, but the force of the Welsh party was never at any time in evidence. Mr. Brynmor Jones, with most commendable self-sacrifice, has undertaken the duties of party whip. At the present moment he is absolutely without a party, for any practical purpose. If Wales is to gain anything in the present parliament it must be by a concerted line of ment it must be by a concerted line of action. Up to now the Welsh Liberal party is without a line at all.

SIR JOHN JONES JENKINS AND TINPLATE.

At a recent banquet, Sir John Jones Jenkins, one of the best authorities on the tinplate industry of Wales, delivered himself of these remarks: "Unfortunately, the tinplate trade for the past few years has been in anything but a prosperous condition. The Mc-Kinley tariff, possibly, was the beginning of evil days, but, in addition to that, they had had a good many finanindustry and the manufacture of plates in America had both had to do with this. He found fault with the workmen for their conduct in giving different concessions to different makers. How could the maker, with 10 per cent. reduction, compete with another receiv-ing 25 per cent? He did not blame the ing 25 per cent? He did not blame the men altogether for having made the varying concessions. He believed that if there had, been greater unity among the men, if they had been better led, by men who properly had the interests of the trade at heart, men who also acted honestly in the positions in which they were placed—he did not charge all their leaders with dishonesty—the evils of the present situation might to some extent have been averted. He had read in the Western Mail an interview with Mr. Stern, the editor of the American Mr. Stern, the editor of the American Artisan. There were a great many points in it, and he commended the men to read it. There were also many points the masters might read and consider and take to heart. It was true, as was stated in that interview, that we had not a monopoly on the tinplate trade. He did not think that any country could hold for long the monopoly of any trade, but if employer and employed had worked together they ought to have kept the tinplate trade, and have produced at a lower price than any other place in the world. But they had driven the trade away, not only to

Gradually Wales is forcing herself to the front in English literature, and in time she bids fair to occupy the premi-um place in English fiction-writing. George Meredith is proud of his Welsh nationality, and among the rising men is Richard Pryce, who boasts of his descent from a Breconshire family. Ernest Rhys, W. E. Tirebuck and "Ow-en Rhoscomy!"
