Eefore Aubrey Boucleault left New York he attended a performance given by Santanelli, the hypnotist, who has just astonished the medical faculty by placing a man in a hypnotic sleep for seven days and seven nights. During that time the man took neither food not drink. After the performance Mr Boucicault was taken on the stage and introduced to Santanelli. The doctors had just relieved each other of the watch at the bedside of the sleeping men. Santanelli asked Anthony Bouci-cault whether he believed in hypnotism. "Perfectly: certainly," was the reply. "Perfectly; certainly," was the reply. "It is a power that we all have to more or less extent. It only needs develop-ing. What people call magnetism in actors is only a form of hypnotism. Hypnotism is nothing more nor less than suggestion. Nothing would hap-ne is the more it not for suggestion. pen in life were it not for suggestion. The art of acting is founded on sug-gestion. To prove what I say I will take one of your subjects and hypnotize

He did so, and while in the hypnofic He did so, and while in the hypothe state the subject performed many of the same things that Santanelli had made him do earlier in the evening. Mr. Bouclcault added several of his own, which keot the doctors in a roar of laughter. Bringing the subject to, young Bouclcault walked down, and, looking at the subject that had been sleeping for seven days and seven nights, he said, "What a benefit this would be to some actors during the would be to some actors during the summer, if they han't to pay board," and with a quiet laugh he strolled out.

St. Clair McKelway, at the Daly dinner the other night, responded aptly to the toast. "The Theater and the Press." Among other things he said:

"Both appeal to the public every day. The stage, however, can have runs, and in this case the longer the better. The newspapers must be new every morning, and renewed every evening. The stage pictures either past or contemporary life; the press must apply life just as it is and just as it finds it. The stage is primarily devoted to simulation; the press has been accused of habitual dissimulation. The stage is essentially personal. The actors asessentially personal. The actors as-sume the parts of characters. The suc-cases of the representation depends upon their abilities or representation for advancement. The press is dis-tinctly impersonal, so far as its work-ers are concerned. The stage can have its writings done for it, clothed up, ab-breviated or elongated. The press must do its own writing for itself as it goes along, as the exigencies of space and time require. The stage selects its own tragedles, its own dramas, its com-edies. The press must take life as it finds it, deal with it as it is, always finds it, deal with it as it is, always with truth. I hope, which is the intention to be accurate-not possibly alfunction of subsequent evidence, or the discovery not known at the time of antecedent circumstances. The stage can frame its pictures, garnish them with scenery, with costumes, with properties, and can illumine and en-liven its productions with what on the boards is technically called business or appointments. The newspapers can do very little pointing up of that kind.

Illustration does play a potent part in journalism, but only on the simplest scale, only in response to the quickest Wyoming avenue, below Mulberry street, Divine worship morning and evening. Sabbath school 12 m., Young mentary forms of art. The stage can select its writers as well as its subers at random to tasks. They may or may not be fitted for those tasks; the discovery of that question can only be left to experiment or experience. Those workers themselves cannot tell what the subjects, if they are simply sketch writers, to which they are assigned will turn out to be. They cannot tell when they bring their matter down to the of-fice whether they can have much or lit-tle room in which to offer it. "However, actors and newspaper writters are alike in several respects. A company of dramatic artists and a company of newspaper workers are sev eral parts of one stupendous whole. In both professions they are artists in pro-portion to their fidelity to the general design, to their loyalty to the common purpose, to their attachment to the es-tablishment with which they are connected to their capability, to their ca-pacity, whether in the creation and in furtherance of a character or in the advocacy of a cause, to let the truth of their function burn at fever heat in their minds, while self sinks below zero in their conscientiousness. The stage can represent plays as they ought to be. The comedy and the tragedy of human life in the press must be pre-sented as it is. However, in both the spirit in which we work is the chief, matter. The dramatic worker must strive towards the accomplishment by the contribution of his talents, of the moral motives of the production. The press worker must strive in telling his story of crime to make crime not attractive, but repulsive; in telling his story of suffering to make it appeal to the heart of humanity. The medium in which we work subdues the hand of the worker, but it is the spiritual medjum in which we work and not the material or sordid consideration as the in-complete reward at the end of the toil. Newspapers and the stage are alike in this. The best are the best, the worst are the worst. The worst may have the largest investigation the largest immediate revenue, but be lieve me, that the duration of the best is the longest, and that not only the his the longest, and that that only the moral, and social, and spiritual, but the temporal reward of the best is cer-tainly the surest in the long run. All hail to the coming of the legitimate drama. All hail to the going of the illegitimate press! The police, with pro-mistic and multicapproduction suppress priety and public approbation, suppress the illegitimate traffic. When it trans-cends the bounds of decency it should have its exchange in that moral police force of public opinion which would expel unclean journalism from the home, which would withdraw from unclean journalism the support of the mercantile and financial institutions, and which would put upon press work as upon dramatic work, as upon pulpit work, as upon art work the crownthe crown only when the crown de-

In the mean-time the summer season, with its growing tendency for stage amusement, ought to make some amends for the winter of the-atrical discontent. Formerly a good showing in advertising could be had in all the New York papers by a manager at a cost of not more than $200 a week. The great Parisian critic, Sarcey, dis-coursing on the latest developments in public amusements in Paris-the undress-ing pieces that have started also in New York-says: "It is the public's fault. Would managers give us plays in which undressing takes the place of wit if they had not found that the public patronizes at present only shameless exhibitions of indecency? I am waiting impatiently for the time, which seems to be nearzat hand, when promography (the word must be ugly when the thing is ugly) will disgust Parisans and will reign no more in our theaters. The time has come to take a broom in our hands and apply it to clean-ing out our Augean stables. Everything has its day. Nudity and indecency have had theirs. Now away with them to the sewers!" speak for themselves and need no puffs from us. Our friends are all invited to inspect us.

cf a Galiant Naval Commanders. For The Tribune. While the United States ship Monticello, was scaling bollers in Reaufort, N. C., the dispatch boat from the fleet off Fort Fisher, N. C., came and reported a from-clad ram had scattered the fleet. Com-mander Cushing was on shore. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon the brave young seaman came on board and as soon as his feet were on the Monticello's decks his or-ders rang out: "Tell the chief engineer I want to see him at once. Stop scaling bollers; call your men out. Put on mar-heads; fill the bollers with water; get up stam as soon as possible; it is reported by dispatch boat that a ram has scattered the fleet!" Mr. Hadfell hoisted the union jack for a pilot and orders were issued to rowd on all steam and to get out to sea as quick as possible. We got to the fleet in the night off Fort Fisher and early next morning got under way for Western Pass, slxty miles around Frying Pan Shoals, and on our arrival Cushing called for volunteers. Among those who re-sponded were Officers Charles A. Petit, William L. Harworth, Charles Croton, C. A Martine and W. H. Call, and men to the stand second cutter and our young com-mander into his own gig. By the way, the olicers and men had to joke a little, say. Well, to the point: We let go from the with muffled oars; pulled past Battery bille in search of the ram and found no spins of one. On our return we hugged bank, going out to sea from Smithville, and when near Fort Caswell the boars of Fort Caswell we all thought we say the ram, with sloping sides and smoke-starting on this expedition. Then we crossed the channel and land-ed on Smith Island, about 300 yards from the battery containing as reported 800 or 900 Confedrate States of America soldiers wanting to do damge of some kind. Just at that time the moon began to raise out of the water and there was an alarm at the fort and we got into our boats and pulled for the ship, thoroughly disappoint-ed that it was not possible for us to ac-complish anything. I think this is a hith-erto unwritten episode in the life of the brave young commander, W. B. Cushing. Respectfully, W. R. Call, Ex-Second Assistant Engineer, U. S. N.
