THE LUCKY ROSEBUD.

In a distant country once dwelt a woman who was very rich. She owned a magnificent...

However when night came, the lady found she had taken but three pellets in all the day...

"Good morning," she said. "Will you please to tell me the name of that rose bud you have been using?"

"Indeed," said the rich woman. "Can you be the old alchemist I have heard so much about?"

"I shall not require much," said the alchemist. "Only if you take my pellets you must observe the rules that go with them."

"These pellets," he said, "are very powerful. Taken in the right manner they promote good health and give you a good digestion."

"These pellets," he said, "are very powerful. Taken in the right manner they promote good health and give you a good digestion."

"Do," said the old man smiling. "Oh, you can bring me down a rosebud or two for my business is increasing."

"The lady remembered the old man's warning and tried to smile. She tried again and again but to no better purpose."

"Do," said the old man smiling. "Oh, you can bring me down a rosebud or two for my business is increasing."

"I shall be obliged to wait until after breakfast before I take a pellet," thought the lady to herself.

"Do," said the old man smiling. "Oh, you can bring me down a rosebud or two for my business is increasing."
