EASTERN VICE-PRESIDENTS. The Republican Nomination for the Office Has Usually Gone to the East.

Day Will Begin with the Decoration of

The Republican Nomination for the Office Has Usually Gone to the East.

The "empty honor" of a nomination for the vice-presidency has usually been given in Republican national conventions to some eastern state, says the Sun, and usually to one which it was hoped might be turned into the Republican electoral column by means of this concession. The first Republican national convention of 1856 gave the nomination for vice-president to a resident of the state of New Jersey, which has not been honored by either party in respect to the vice-presidency since, though the Republicans of New Jersey have this year a candidate for the nomination for vice-president in Garrett A. Hobart, of Paterson. The convention falled of its purpose, for the Republican electors in that year were beaten by 18,060 in New Jersey.

In 1860 and 1872 the Republican nomination for vice-president went to New England. In the former year it was Hannibal Hamilin of Maine who was nominated for vice-president, and in 1872 it was Henry Wilson of Massachusetts who received the same honor. In both years the Republicans were successful not only in the country at large, but also in the two states which supplied the vice-presidential candidates. In 1876, 1880, 1888 and 1892 the Republicans nominated New York men for the vice-presidency. In two cases the nominations for the minor office on the cans nominated New York men for the vice-presidency. In two cases the nominations for the minor office on the presidential ticket were successful in securing the electoral vote of New York; in the other two cases they failed. Oddly enough the two vice-presidents who put New York into the Republican column in 1880 and 1888 were, both of them, natives of Vermont. ChesterA. Arthur, elected in 1880, was a native of Franklin county. He was born in the town of Fairfield. Governor Morton was born in Shoreham. The two vice-presidents nominated from New York for whom this state did not cast its electoral vote when they were candidates were William A. Wheeler of Franklin county and Whitelaw Reid. Mr. Reid was born in Onio, in the town of Zenia. His associate on the Republican national ticket of 1892, Mr. Harriswas born in Ohio also. The Republicans all their national coversations. of Zenia. This associate on the republican national ticket of 1892, Mr. Harriswas born in Ohio also. The Republicans in all their national conventions, except three, have gone either to New York or New Jersey or the New England states for their vice-presidential candidates. In 1864 they went to the South for a candidate; in 1868 the Republican nominees for president and vice-president were chosen from adjacent states, Illinois and Indiana, and in 1834 the Republican nomination for the presidency having been accorded to the cast, the nomination for vice-president went west to Illinois.

It is thought probable by many Republicans that there will be an eastern candidate for the vice-presidency this year, and in addition to New Jersey's candidate the claims of some Connec-candidate the ciains of some Connec-ticut men have been discussed. Con-necticut is one of the states which have usually been thought by its states-men worthy of presidential honors. Though the population of the Natmer states not large its elegant. state is not large, its electoral votes ar state is not large, its electoral votes are often important, and the state has at all times been been closely contested by the two porties. There are Connecticut-born men in nearly every attact of the neath, but thus far in Trepublican mational conventions, the most prominent former fless penaltics.

Connecticut candidate for either place on the presidential their has been Senator Joseph E. Hawley, who is a native of North Caronina. New York has more than half a dozen condidates for the vice-presidency this year. A CURIOUS DICTIONARY.

SUPT. TAYLOR'S SALARY.

Sir:—I have observed Horace Scaman's communication in Tuesday's Tribune relative to the increase of salary of county superintendent of schools made at the recent directors' convention. He makes it appear that J. W. Cure was the only director courageous enough to raise his voice against placing the salary at $3,000. In justice to my fellow-directors from the rural districts of the county. I desire to explain that the attendance from these districts was light owing to the busy time of the year for farmers and the understanding that there was no contest on. Those of us who were present were taken by surprise, not being aware that an effort was to be made to advance the salary.

There was a vizorous fight made against the raise to $3,000 and a large majority of our people voted against it. We were much surprised at the result of the ballot and as some claimed they did not understand the motion as put, an effort was made to have it reconsidered, hoping to have the result changed. Upon being personally appealed to, Mr. Cure, who had voted for the motion, moved a reconsideration. He did not disclaim sympathy with the motion, but said he moved a reconsideration in the spirit of fairness to those who had misunderstood it. He furthermore voted against his own motion to reconsider.

There are some of us who are proud of Editor of The Tribune.

more voted against his own motion to reconsider.

There are some of us who are proud of being in the minority on this question who are jealous of having all the credit confered uson Mr. Cure. While I am a personal friend of Professor Taylor's and rejoice in his prosperity. I very much regret the precedent established by this action and believe it was unwise and uncalled for.

The jury found that Mrs. Francis, the decedent, was the wife of Thomas Watkins in 1834, when she made the will, and that she was not afterward legally married to was not afterward legally married to any other person. Watkins went away and left her, but she had not secured a divorce from him, and, therefore, could not marry anybody else. TWO INSURANCE SUITS. Two insurance suits were tried be-fore Judge Gunster in No. 2. Ann O'Grady was the plaintiff in each case and the defendant was the Prudential Life Insurance company. The plaintiff had her mother insured, and at the tiff had her mother insured, and at the latter's death the company refused to pay the policies on the ground that they were obtained through misrepresenting the age of the deceased. A verdict was given in one case for $143.55 and in the other for $151.91 in favor of Mrs. O'Grady. These are the full amounts of her claims.

The suit of A. T. Philo against Joseph Halderman was tried before Judge Edwards. Mrs. Halderman left Joseph about two years ago, claiming that she was treated so cruelly that she could not live with him. Philo gallantly took her in and kept her six weeks. He sent a bill for her board to her husband, and when it was not raid he word be. and when it was not paid he sued be-fore an alderman and got judgment. Halderman appealed the case to court.
