Conductor Claimed That His Temper Had Been Soured by His Vocation. From the New York Sun.

There wasn't a vacant seat in the car when the woman boarded it, and a place just inside the door, leaning against the casing. She was in the way of everybody who wanted to get in or out of the car, and it seemed quite proper for the conductor to direct her attention to that fact, and to tell her to move up out of the way. However, he might have done it in a more respectful manner. As it was, he shouted angrily:
