A Grewsome Foe.

Oh, flee from his pathway, all creatures of vice,
And likewise all good men and true;
For he handles a weapon more cruel than nice,
And its terros are thirsting for you.
His wounds are not mortal. He challenges not
To combat that reddens with blood,
But the blushes he raises are never forgot;
The man with a handful of mud.
And he hurls it on high, and he watches it spread,
And his laugh echoes fearful and loud.
He cares not, though some may alight on his head,
If it only bespatter the crowd.
The whiter the object, the deeper the stain,
When abuse covers all in its flood;
But his joys are his own, and he laughs at their pain;
The man with a handful of mud.

WRINKLES REVEAL CHARACTER

By the Lines in Your Face We Tell the Story of Your Life.

A phrenologist can describe a person's character and peculiarities more or less accurately by examining his "bumps," and a physiognomist can diagnose one's character from the features, but a dermatologist has discovered that wrinkles are a wonderful aid in dissecting a person's general characterstics.

A Chicago dermatologist says: Life in crowded cities writes its various emotions upon the plastic faces of the people, and the surging stream of humanity as it jostles its way with the pitiless hurry and absorption in the pursuit of wealth, pleasure and happiness, strives to catch and enchain the desire of the heart. Time and worry mark their victims with a surety that none can mistake and character and expression are lent to a face by its lines.

The horizontal lines upon the forehead are produced by mental anxiety, the worry and fret of life, and they indicate a tendency to nervous anxiety and are wholly opposed to the serenity of unruffled brows. Short, horizontal lines just above the roof of the nose indicate benevolence; when found just below the roof of the nose they show one that is accustomed to exercise authority, especially when it takes the form of forbidding.

A single vertical wrinkle between the eyebrows shows strict honesty in money matters. A disposition to require justice in others is indicated by two wrinkles each side of the first; while wrinkles outward from these show conscientiousness. These lines are often marked in those deeply absorbed in business, in thinkers, writers and inventors; and with straight, lowered brows indicate strong concentration of purpose, long and hard thinking and absorption in affairs.

The lines raying outward from the eyes, show capacity for enjoyment, as well as the two deep furrows from the mouth by the upper lip. They are the penalty we pay for mirth and form the future channel of the tear. Either perpendicular or curved wrinkles below the angle of the mouth indicate a love of truth, and hatred of cant and hypocrisy. When these lines are very marked, it begets grumbling at men and things in general. Hate draws the lower lip still further downward, exposing the under teeth. Lines extending downward from the angle of the mouth toward the chin, when marked, show a tendency of sadness and melancholy.

One who has these wrinkles takes a serious view of life, and does not look upon it as a holiday, but as a season of work and struggle involving much responsibility. We notice these lines in a mother's face when she is mourning for a child. Poor health will also bring these lines by affecting the mind's outlook upon life.

Hospitality marks the face with irregular curved lines, not far from the outer angles of the mouth. When they are pronounced, a warm welcome is given to a stranger within the gates.

Low, projecting eyebrows indicate discernment; when accompanied by eyelids that more nearly close the eye, this denotes less facility of impression, but a clearer insight, more definite ideas and greater permanence and steadiness of action. Narrow-eyed persons see less, but think more and feel more intensely.

These are true indications of character that are revealed by wrinkles. There are, however, many people who possess some of the characteristics herein described who have not the accompanying wrinkles.

In these days of dermatological skill no one need go through life with a wrinkled face, for wrinkles are easily and painlessly removed.

If the police board was acquainted with the possibilities of the dermatologist in regard to improving and changing the nose, ears, mouth and other features, the board would not place such confidence in the Bertillon system, which consists of measuring the features of criminals instead of having the criminals photographed.

It is possible for one to have his entire personal appearance so changed that indentification would be practically impossible.

A dermatologist would not lend his skill in defeating the ends of justice, but the fact that it is possible to set the famous Bertillon system at defiance is at least interesting.

HE SHED HIS SKIN.

Case of an Eight-Year Old, Who Wriggled Out of His Cuticle.

Lake City (Fla.) Dispatch Cincinnati Enquirer.

The case of John Allen, an 8-year-old boy of this place, is puzzling the physicians. Six weeks ago an orange thorn penetrated the boy's hip. Inflammation followed and the boy was soon horribly swollen from head to foot. Finally the swelling subsided, but the boy immediately began to shed his skin. That on the face came off separately, but from the neck down the cuticle remained intact and moved off by way of the hands and feet without breaking. The cuticle was five days in passing off, and during that time the boy remained on the bed wriggling like a snake at moulting time. The child seemed to be in no pain, but complained of a tickling sensation and of a crawling of the flesh. When the cuticle had been shed the boy immediately recovered, and is now as well as ever. The skin which is shed is on exhibition at a physician's office. It is a perfect cast of the human form from the neck down, and is about the consistency of hard glue, which it much resembles.

Unconquered.

"That man," said the cannibal warrior, "had the most argumentative nature I ever encountered."

"Do you mean the one that you just ate?"

"Yes. He had a dispute on certain points of ethics and the result was that I had him for dinner."

"Well that gave you the best of the controversy."
