Tearing Up of the Asphalt Pave on Jackson Street Results in Several Small Accidents.

One of the most striking instances of negligence resulted in an accident to bleyelist last night. In front of Trostle's meat market on Jackson street the pave had been torn up and an excavation made to the gas main. The dirt was afterward piled back into the hole, and owing to the loosening of the dirt the filled in part was higher by over a foot than the level of the road. This was not all. The slabs of asphalt which were taken up were left piled upon the pave a few feet from the heap of No light or other danger signal was placed at the spot last night, and a number of small accidents were the

Will Lewis, a bicyclist, was riding along at a speedy gait when he struck the obstruction, and was hurled to the asphalt, his body striking the chunks of pave. Lewis was badly bruised and the wheel was damaged. A horse pulling a buggy also struck the pieces of pave. The horse stumbled and was
