RELIGIOUS PRESS ON SILVER.

The advocates of the gold standard in the States appear to have a fair appreciation of the magnitude of the task which confronts them, that of educating the masses into a recognition of the importance of sound money.

But there will be something more than a mere conflict of intellects between the champions of opposing theories as regards to the currency.

Of course with those who are not rendered desperate by misfortune much may be done in the way of showing the poor man or the man of moderate means that he has as much to lose by disturbance as his wealthier neighbor.

These considerations must be kept steadily in view. For anarchy, plunder, lawlessness, there is of course nothing but the strong arm of the law.
