WEST SIDE EVENTS.

Several Gambling Places in Active Operation Here--- A Movement Against Them Probable.

There are gambling dens on the West Side. This statement is on the authority of a well-known churchman, who recently made an investigation and volunteered the information to a Tribune The game most generally played is poker, and, according to the gentleman referred to, the game "limit" is usually five and twenty-five cents. One poker room is in the rear of a cigar establishment, and the location is in the center of the town. Two saloons, also, allow poker playing for money in their back rooms. These places are also centrally located. ometimes play is kept up all night and the dejected, wornout gamblers can be seen skulking homeward at daylight. The players are young men of respectable parents. The gentleman who of age and was well liked by a large offers the information is possessed of circle of friends. The funeral will take the players' names, and where the place tomorrow at 2 o'clock from the games are conducted. It is probable late residence. GREAT STREET CAR SERVICE. Never has the West Side been blessed with such excellent street car service as the Traction company now offers The new belt line works like a well ciled mechanism and the double tracks from Seventh street to Franklin avenue complete a really peerless line, "We can more than make our time now," said a street car conductor the other day. This means that if more cars are needed the company can run them without the slightest confusion. The only bod spot in the system is the hill between Washburn and Luzerne streets. At odd times cars meet at the hill top and there follows an unfortunate wait while the two conductors have food for lebate. The line is simply great, leav ing out this single imperfection, and the trouble caused by the laying of the louble tracks is now forgotten by the literateur, is at present at Cardiff, and located in one of the alcoves of the reference rooms of the Free Library. Here he may be found industriously engaged from early morn till late at night pursuing with avidity the magnificent collection of manuscripts which formed part of the Middle Hill collection recently purchased for the Cardiff Free Library. Two years have not elapsed since Mr. Ashton, after a lengthy service of twenty-five years, retired from the Merionethshire police constabulary, and it will ever remain a marvel how he, a humble rural policeman, deprived of the advantages of an early education, and with his time pretty fully occupied with the multifarious duties of his office, could have the leisure, much less the disposition, to accomplish the great work that he has for the literature of his native land. And, yet, the literary policeman has for years been known throughout the length and breadth of Wales as a hardworking prize-winner at the great National eistefoddfodau, and the author of many voluminous works of original research involving years of painful toil and persevering industry. A sufficient testimony to the value of his work in this respect is to be found in the gratifying fact that last year his labors were recognized by a grant of one hundred pounds voted to him by the treasury out of the Royal Bounty Fund, and, having regard to his published works, and the advantages that would accrue to Weish literature were he able to prosecute these labors free from the cankering anxieties of wordly circumstances, it is to be hoped that the grant may be continued as to an annual pen-

UNIQUE AND DISTINGUISHED RECORD

The Author of Many Valuable Bocks Receives One Hundred Pounds in Gold from Her Majesty's Government in Recognition of his Superior Talents.

Mr. Charles Ashton, the great Weish

> DIFFICULTIES OF EARLY DAYS. Enough has been cited to show that Mr. Ashton's record is in every sense unique and distinguished, but it will appear far more so when it is explained that he had absolutely no education beyond a period of four years spent as a child in a small country school in his native hamlet of Ty'nsarn, near Llawrglyn, in the parish of Trefegiwys, ontgomeryshire. He left home for Dylifan lead mines, where he was engaged to dress ore for a few years, and subsequently there came a period of suffering and hardship while he sought to better his lot in Chester and Liverpool. In those days he found employment among the laborers engaged in laying out Grosvenor Park, now one of the sights of Chester, and considered that he was made for life when he was engaged as porter by the Great Western Rallway company at a little country section called Crudington, situate between Welington and Crewe in Shropshire, on the Market Dryaton railway While in the service of the company he was successively stationed at Parva, Croesnewydd, Llandderfel and Bala. In 1869 he joined the Merionethshire police force, and remained in it until October, 1894, a period of 25 years and four months. He has ever been a diligent student, and at one period he sought by home study to qualify for the matriculation examination of the London University, and for that purpose took up classies, mathematics and science, but much to his regret he was forced by circumstances to relinquish his almost hopeless atetmpt.
