WEST SIDE EVENTS.

Workmen at the New No. 16 School Could Not Spell "Public. News Notes.

Nearly everybody who has seen the front of the new No. 16 school on Fairview avenue looks at it twice, then scratches his or her head and departs with a deep rooted opinion that some one has blundered. It's all on account of the word "Public," the letters of which are raised on a long stone over the main entrance. As it is seen at No. 16 the word reads "PVblic."

What should be a "u" seems to be a "V" and everybody things that the man who cut out the letter is either a bad speller or is careless in his alphabet. Children, especially, note the funny appearance of the word, and great things are said by the little ones as they explain the mistake and incidentally parade their own personal education. And many a full-grown adult is laughing. Many believe that the whole front of the building will be torn down to remedy the misspelled word. One man gravely said it would cost $590 to fix things right.

The fact of the matter is that the spelling and the word are correct. It is a new tangled notion in literary and, especially, in magazine circles to make a "n" look like a "V." The architect, wanting to be up to date, followed the new fad. The style is an olden one, and plain people are not used to it. Hence the fuss. There is no mistake. but common English, present day hieroglyphics would please better.
