Doctors Who Say That the Bite of a Dog Is Harmless---Ancient Ideas Are Questioned.

From the Baltimore Sun.

With the approach of midsummer comes the usual hydrophobia scare, and nervous people are almost frightened out of their wits at the mere thought of being attacked by a dog afflicted with rables. It is, of course, the part of wisdom to give a vicious dog, mad or not mad, a wide berth, both in the summer months and when the mercury is hovering around the zero point. At the same time it is encouraging to be informed by distinguished professors of medicine and surgery that hydrophobia is at best a theory and has no actual existence. It belongs, according to a pamphlet recently published in Philadelphia, to the class of simulated dis-"I am of the opinion," says Dr. cases. Joseph W. Hearn, professor of clinical surgery in Jefferson Medical college. "that the bite of a dog is no more dangerous than the scratch of a pin or the puncture of an infectious nail. Because of exaggerated printed and oral accounts the picture of hydrophobia is so stamped upon the public mind that the thought of It, after being bitten by a dog, brows imaginative people into panes of nervous excitement, in which they unconsciously reproduce its supposed symptoms." Dr. Charles W. Dalles, lecturer on the history of medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, has made the most exhaustive investigation, both in the United States and in Europe, and he inclines to the view that there is no such specific malady as hydrophobia. and that there is not a case on record which can be conclusively proved to have resulted from the bite of a dog or any other cause. The records of the London hospital showed recently 2,668 persons bitten by angry dogs, but none of them developed hydrophobia. St George's hospital, London, treated 4,-900 patients bitten by dogs supposed to be mad, but not a case of hydrophobla. At the Pennsylvania hospital, Philadelphia, only two cases which were sup-posed to be hydrophobia have occurred in 140 years. One of these was submitted to bacteriological tests, but the diagnosis of hydrophobia was not confirmed and the municipal authorities refused to accept the death as one from that disease. At the Philadelphia dog pound 150,000 dogs have been handled in the past twenty-five years and many of the keepers and employes have been bitten, yet there has never been a case of hydrophobia. Dr. Edward C. Spitzka, the distinguished New York specialist, Much of the o tervation of sus says: picious dogs is made through optics disturbed by fear and by persons incom-petent to interpret what they see." Notwithstanding every effort which Dr. Spitzka has made to secure the observation of rables in man or dog, not a single opportunity has been afforded him. The testimony of medical men of wide experience is invariable to the effect that if hydrophobia develops in human beings at all it is only on very rare occasions, and that the condition of hysterical excitement usually described as hydrophobia is merely a series of symptoms due to dread of the disease.

BEANS FOR EVERY MEAL.

Remarkable Diet of a Man Who Was From Boston.

From New York Journal. Sixty-two days. Three meals a day. Beans for every meal. That was the record of Pierre Richelleu's imprisonment by the Spanish authorities at Santingo de Cuba. If Pierre were a native Bostonese he would probably have liked nothing better, but he was born in France and is a man of the sea withal, and that protracted period of sub-sistence upon beans has left rancor in his heart and utter demoralization in his interior economy. Pierre had taken out naturalization papers in Boston previous to risking his life, liberty and digestive mechan-ism in Spanish territory. He hoped, fondly but vainly, that this ceremony would render him bean proof. In his travels about the world he had heard of the vast use the Spaniards make of beans.

He is now "standing off and on" about he corridors of the United States district court in Boston, waiting for the authorities to look up his "citizen pa-pers," and with them as a basis to file a $20,000 claim against the government of the dons for the destruction of his

Pierre's complete name is Pierre Gus-tave Laymet Richelieu. In February of 1895 he found himself at Port au Prince, Hayti. One day he started out in a little boat called the Yankee Doodie and with a companion named August Bolton went sailing along the coast fo

A storm drove them out of their reckoning and on a dark night they went ashore on the coast of Cuba. No sconer had they set foot on the soil than a lot of vigilant senors thrust them into prison as insurgent sympathizers. There they remained for sixty-two days. Now Spain feeds her army and navy principally upon beans, and the Spanish captors reasoned that what was good enough for the warriors of the castle was certainly good enough for rebel suspects. So beans they got, and noth-ing more. The weary weeks of confine-ment and bean diet were punctuated with cheerful announcements from time with cheerful announcements from time to time that they might expect to be shot within a day or two. "Well," says Richelieu, "they didn't do that, but it's about the only thing they didn't do. We had nothing to eat but beans." Whether it was really the beans or the fear of death that did it, within a for down both man some no Withow few days both men were so ill they could scarcely stand. They managed at last to gain the notice of the American consul and were released. There was no evidence against them. They came back to New York, vicitins of beans and Andalusian perversity, and demanded that the government obtain redress for them.
