SALVATORE'S SLAYER IS CAPTURED

He Was Arrested at 5 O'clock Last Night in Carbondale.

HE HAS A STAB WOUND IN THE BACK

The Man With Whom Dambrosio Was Staying Came to Danmore Yesterday to Get Some Money to Aid Him to Escape from the Country and in That Way His Whereabouts Became Known.

Frank Dambrosio, who murdered Rocco Salvatore at Dunker Hill, Danmore, at 6.30 o'clock last Friday evening, and escaped after committing the deed, was captured at 8 o'clock last night in Carbondale and is now in the county jail. He fell into the hands of the officers through a man named Rafael Samato, who came to Danmore yesterday to get money to enable the murderer to escape from the country.

Rocco Salvatore, of the West Side, a friend of Dambrosio, felt confident that the murder was pre-arranged and that Frank Chipriano, the man with whom the dead man and his slayer boarded, was an accessory. Pippo Dambrosio, a brother of the murderer, and Joseph Lozano were also suspected of being concerned in the crime, and a warrant against them was issued Saturday by Alderman Millar charging them with being accessories.

The warrants were placed in the hands of Special Officer John Tierney. He arrested Chipriano Saturday night and brought him to the central police station. Yesterday afternoon he went to Danmore to arrest Dambrosio, the murderer's brother, and Lozano. When he was bringing both to the street car he ran into a man, an Italian, who stopped them and began talking to Dambrosio.

TIERNY SUSPECTED THEM.

Officer Tierney could find out nothing from his prisoners about the man that spoke to them. They tried to make believe that they lived in Danmore, and he was carrying on merely a commonplace conversation about their going to jail. But they were so anxious to say that impression that he suspected that they were not telling the truth.

A little while before that Constable Frank Williams, of the Tenth ward, who is an Italian, saw the same man and knowing him to be from Carbondale and a friend of Dambrosio, he immediately suspected that Samato was the leader of some message from the murderer. It proved to be the fact that Samato was the man who had the conversation with Officer Tierney's prisoners, and that what he wanted was money to help the murderer escape from the country to Italy.

The information was communicated to County Detective Layshon, and he set word to Chief of Police McAndrew, of Carbondale. The chief and Patrolman McAndrew went to Samato's house and there they found Dambrosio. He offered no resistance and admitted his identity. They took him to the lockup and waited for the arrival of County Detective Layshon.

Mr. Layshon, Constable Frank Williams and Constable Timothy Jones went to Carbondale and they took charge of the murderer. Constable Williams, who knew him as being along for the purpose of identification, but he was not necessary, for Dambrosio acknowledged that he was the man and he seemed to be content to go to jail. He was not the least disturbed at his arrest, and he took it very coolly.

An examination of his back revealed the fact that Chipriano was not telling an untruth when he said that ambulance was stabbed. There is a small wound behind the right shoulder, and it looks like a stab wound. Dambrosio was very reticent and had nothing to say except that he killed Salvatore for fear of getting killed himself. He looks like a man who was in danger when he struck the blow that sent Salvatore to his fate.

It was learned that as soon as he committed the crime, he went to the house of Rafael Chipriano in Danmore, who is an uncle of Frank Chipriano, his boarding boss, and changed his name to Rafael Chipriano. He was in Carbondale. He arrived at the house of Samato, on Dundaff street at 8 o'clock Saturday night, having walked all the way. On his way up he was often fearful that he was being followed, and he switched off into the woods several times and remained concealed for a while.

Then his courage would pick up again, and he would rely on his not being known to preserve him from capture. As soon as he got to Carbondale he went to Samato's house, and the latter started for Danmore yesterday to see Dambrosio's brother to get money to help the fugitive out of the country.

Dambrosio expected that his friends in Danmore would supply him with money to reach Italy. He had no money himself, and unless they gave it to him he would not be able to go far. When Samato got to Danmore he found Officer Tierney with the handcuffs on the brother. There was nobody else to whom he could go and expect anything from. He made a canvas among the Italians of Dunker Hill for assistance, but none of them could be induced to do anything for Dambrosio. Before Lamato returned home the officers had visited his house and arrested the murderer.

BROUGHT TO THIS CITY.

Mr. Leyshon and Constables Jones and Williams took Dambrosio down from Carbondale on the street car. They had him securely handcuffed, and when the corner of Lackawanna and Franklin avenues was reached and they got off the Peckville car, there was a crowd of 1,000 people around in less than five minutes to get a look at the prisoner.

Officer Tierney took Chipriano with him to the lockup at 5 o'clock in the afternoon to search Samato's house and look for Dambrosio, but when they reached Carbondale on the street car, Dambrosio had been arrested and was then in custody.

Chipriano, Dambrosio, the murderer's brother, and Lozano, will have a hearing this morning before Alderman Millar on the charge of being accessories. Millar hopes to be able to have evidence to prove that there was a conspiracy to murder Salvatore, and that Chipriano was at the bottom of it.

The stab wound in Dambrosio's back disappeared the day that there was a scuffle between him and Salvatore, and the story told by Chipriano is probably true. Salvatore will be buried this afternoon.

FOR PYNE BOROUG.

Evidence Taken Saturday Morning Before Judge Edwards.

Before Judge Edwards on Saturday the prayer of the citizens of the Pyne, Archibald, Continental, Hampton and Sloan villages in Lackawanna township for a borough to be called the borough of Pyne was heard. Major Everett Warren was counsel for the petitioners and evidence was taken to show that it would be a great improvement to incorporate these places into a borough.

Attorneys L. H. Burns, M. J. Donahoe and H. M. Hart appeared in opposition to the petition. They represented a number of property owners in Minooka. The main reasons advanced by the borough should be incorporated is that the school facilities and police protection are so bad that it is burdensome to live there. The mail

MURDERER VAN HORN IN A MAYFIELD MINE

Belief That He Was There Heightened Almost to Certainty.

THE PAPERS FOUND IN HIS LAIR

Searching Party That Went Through the Mine Saturday Found a Carbondale Paper of the Previous Evening, but the Man Who Had Been Hiding Could Not Be Found.

The belief that George Van Horn, the murderer of Mrs. Josephine Westcott, had been hiding in the Erie mine at Mayfield, is now heightened to almost a certainty in the minds of the people of that locality.

Saturday, it will be remembered, an announcement was made by Tribune that one of the company hands, Michael Ruddy, while going through an abandoned part of the workings came across a man who, at Ruddy's approach, ran away and escaped by dragging himself through an opening in the roof which led out to the Mayfield yard. A search of the part of the mine was hastily made and a quantity of bedding, an oil stove, cooking utensils and a number of Scranton and Carbondale papers, containing references to the murder, were found in an isolated chamber.

Saturday a searching party was organized and the hunt was commenced at the point where the mysterious dweller in the mine had made his habitation. Great was the surprise of the searchers, who were told that the place they found a copy of the Carbondale Herald of the evening previous containing the account of the presence of some one in the mine. The searchers, however, were disappointed, but nevertheless they persisted in it and every nook and corner of the mine was carefully searched. Whether it was under the floor, or in any of the other places, had been there was no longer in the mine they were satisfied, and after a day's hard work gave up the chase.

The circumstances surrounding the fact that Van Horn has a brother at Mayfield and other relatives in Jersey, causes the conviction that it was he who hid the papers was dropped. The supposition is that he hid among the cars until nightfall and then descended to his den in the mine, remaining there until the papers were dropped to him, when he took flight, realizing that the mine would be thoroughly searched as soon as the alarm became general.

If it was Van Horn he is now undoubtedly at the house of one of the other of his friends, and his capture is a possibility of the near future.

KEELEY GAVE BAIL.

WHIMS OF GREATNESS.

Daniel Webster had a curious fancy for painting the faces of his officers. One week the poor beast would walk around with the faces of his officers painted on his back. On his farm he kept many head of cattle, and some of them became so fond of the painter that they would follow him about like dogs. One day the number were several that resented his whimsies, and they were only restrained and distinguished them from the rest by painting the face of each a beautiful blue.

The effect was so novel that it pleased him, and from that time forth he changed the color of his paint, and he spent hours to spare and would laugh heartily at the astonishment of his friends when they saw the queer looking beasts on his premises.

Napoleon occupied all his leisure moments in making puzzles and indulging in intrigues. He said it relieved a man's mind in solving puzzles, and he was fond of devising a puzzle that his comrades could not solve. When tired of this he loved to fight his battles with his officers, and he was very successful in the matter. He was a dandy soldier, by means of which he fought sham battles with his officers.

Peter the Great had a fashion for being carried about in a wheelbarrow, and when on a hunting party he would return for hours at a time to be wheeled around his estates. He said he liked the motion, and he was very fond of returning home with a number of guests and at once ordering the wheelbarrows to be got in readiness, so that he could return to the city on the large cities in this strange equipage.

William the Conqueror said he derived more pleasure watching dogs fighting than curbing his mustards. He had almost any pasture. He was very fond of the animals and he trained them in all kinds of tricks, which he often exhibited to his friends, and he said that the fox had more brains than any other animal.

President Cleveland likes to paint the children's toys and little odds and ends of household furniture. This is not a trifle, to be sure, but more than one participant knows how much real diversion there is in working with paint and brush. Seated on a stool, with the youngsters of the white house around him, the president would paint his toys or hours embellishing their toys in the liveliest shades.

Gladstone employs his spare time in Thomas O'Brien would give him almost every fine work. He learned the art when a boy, and has as complete a wood-work shop as any of the great ones. Some of the decorations of his home are his own work, and if he made a business of it he would be a success.

Kaiser William finds more amusement in curbing his mustards than in almost any pastime. On every appearance in public his moustache has a different curl. All these are original, so much so, in fact, that before his admirers in the German empire have caught on to the new "style" he appears with another.

Speaker Thomas H. Reed has a pastime that is truly his own. He stands in an open window and recites poetry by the yard. He is especially partial to Longfellow. Mr. Reed recites Tennyson and Whittier also, but he is strong on the verse portion, none that have a ring of defiance in their lines.

POLICEMAN'S FINGER CHEWED.

Wilkes Barren Paid Ten Dollars for the Doing of It.

John Montague, of Wilkes-Barre, paid $10 in Saturday's police court for the privilege of masticating a finger on the hand of Patrolman Parry. Montague had ensconced his tired and somewhat intoxicated frame into a chair in the Westminister hotel during the early hours of Saturday morning and continued to slumber and snore notwithstanding the clerk's efforts to awaken him.

Patrolman Parry succeeded in breaking the weary Wilkes-Barrean's slumber, but in the doing of it had his finger chewed.

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 15.—The owners of the Rochester Base Ball club, of the Eastern League, have offered President F. B. McDonald of the New York National League club, $8,000 for the release of Amos Rusie, the great pitcher. Rusie is at present under suspension in the big league for refusing to play with the New York club. He was fined for dissipation late in the season of 1895 and claims to have been unjustly disciplined.

BASKET BALL NOTES.

In regard to the challenge of the South Scranton team in Saturday's Truth, will say that we are unable to meet them this week at all, but will try to meet them next week at the Scranton Y. M. C. One of the finest games will be played this Thursday night at Constance Hall, Providence, between the Scranton team, under the management of Edward Coleman and the North End, George Koch, right forward of the Turner team, will play the same position for the Scranton team on Thursday evening.
