MR. BRENNAN HONORED.

Cresent Clubs Banquet at the Harri

The members of the Crescent club assembled on Monday evening for a banquet at the Harrison house in honor of P. M. Brennan, who is about to take his departure for his old home in Ireland, where he will spend the winter. A bountful repast had been provided by Landlord Monohan. After the banquet, came the social entertainment beginning with a double quartette by the Crescents.

tette by the Crescents.
W. J. Bergan, president of the club, presided as toastmaster, and in a graceful manner introduced the speakers. Frank D. Collins was called to respond to a toast relating to the topic of "Banqueting." Then came the speech of M. F. Moran in response to the toast "Athletics." He showed the in-terest taken by the club in athletic sports and illustrated his subject in a witty manner. P. F. Clifford was called to illustrate the subject of "Patriotism" and delivered a very earnest address, reviewing Irish history from the earliest times. The toastmaster, in a few well chosen words, then introduced their honored guest, Mayor O'Neill, who was greeted with loud applause. The speaker complimented the club upon their progress in all tha constitutes a well organized society, affording opportunities for honest en-joyment and improvement. His address was eloquent and practical and received warm applause. Mr. Bergan, in behalf of the club, then expressed the heartfelt wishes of the members for brother, Mr. Brennan, that he might enjoy the sacred associations of his old home, and the reunion of mother and son after years of separation. Mr. Brennan expressed his thanks in a brief address and spoke of his five years' membership in the club. The Crescent quartette sang "How can I bear to leave thee." After the banquet the members and their guests enjoyed a social season at the club room.

But Dr. Hurty has shown how all of these spectres may be driven away and mortal men may again revel in the sweets of the ruby lip, as they did in the old days when ignorance was bliss. He says all that is necessary to make kissing healthful is to carfeully wash the mouth with a disinfectant before indulgence in the luxury.

This simplifies matters for lovers. All they need to do is to make free use of disinfectants and they can hit the sips as often as they please. Of course, the first question when a man calls on his sweet love will be, "Have you disinfect-ed?" and if the answer is mutually satisfactory—and we presume if it is not a bottle of disinfectant will be handy—then carbolized lips may meet carbolized lips in a dream of bacterialess bliss.

The almost certain failure of the star-vation cure for dyspepsia has been proven time and again, but still the moment Dyspepsia makes its appearance a course of dieting is at once

All this is radically wrong. It is foolish and unscientific to recommend dicting or starvation to a man suffering from Dyspepsia, because Indigestion itself starves every organ and every nerve and every fibre in the body. What the Dyspeptic wants is abundant nutrition, which means plenty of good, wholesome, well-cooked food and something to assist the weak stomach to digest it. This is exactly the pur-pose for which Stuart's Dyspepsia Tabpose for which Stuart's Dyspepsia Tab-lets are adapted and this is the method by which they cure the worst cases of Dyspepsia, in other words the patient gets plenty of wholesome food and Stu-art's Dyspepsia Tablets digest it for him. COWS TAILS AND SKUNKS. Over in Canton, the recent Farmers' Institute discussed the very important question, whether the length of the question, whether the length of the bone in the cow's tail indicates the length of time she will be in milk. Instances were related where the best milkers in an entire herd were picked out by a stranger, who judged quite largely by the tail. This settled, J. Benson Wright, in speaking of skunks, advanced the opinion that they were the farmer's friends: that they food the farmer's friends; that their food was of grubs, wire worms, etc., and that the average farmer could better afford to suffer the occasional loss of an egg than to have the skunks for-sake the farm. This opinion was concurred in by others who had noted the habits of the little animal. In other words, the skunk is the farmer's strongest friend.

AMERICAN MANNERS.

From the Philadelphia Record. From the Philadelphia Record.
It is claimed by many persons that in the hurlyburly of this workaday world of ours the American man is fast losing his old-time courtesy of manner. The extreme tension upon which the business of the country is carried on, they claim, prevents men from paying the same attention to the little niceties of life which they have done in the next. they have done in the past. While this is doubtless true of many men, our critical seem to have made a mistake in using the word "manners" instead of "ceremony, There is no question that the American are as a race using less ceremony in their social intercourse now than they have in the past; but that their inanners are degenerating admits of a doubt. Ceremonial is almost altogether matter of locality, differing in different places. That which would be considered the proper thing in one place would be conspictions in another. The innate good manners which denote a perfect gentleman are found everywhere. The farther away we get in our social development from a monarchical court and its customs the less ceremonial we find; in its place are to be found simplicity and absence of form, through which true politieness shines as brightly as ever.

However, this abandonment of ceremonial has in a great measure made it very difficult to apply any fixed standard of manners, or to say that the omission or commission of any particular act proves a person to have been ill-bred. We are now far more apt to go to the other extreme and condemn as "bad form" that which was once considered essential in a well-bred man or woman. This disuse of ceremonial comes from the American theory that all men are created equal; for in the European countries, which are governed by a very restrictive sedelety, the deference to titular superiors is the vary foundation of the social code—and this code permits an arreogance to supposed inferiors which would never be tolerated in this country. In our pronounced democracy such a show of respect would be considered as "toadying." of respect would be considered as "tondy of respect would be considered as "toadyling."

Another cause of the decline of the little courtesies is the advent of the typeknown as the "New Woman." who, gloryling in her newly found independence, scorns the helping hand of her escort as being childish and weak. After having been snubbed several times a man naturally does not offer that which is so evidently not wanted.

The advent of women into business life would naturally have a tendency to do away with much of the formalism of ciden times; but if a poll could be taken olden times; but if a poll could be taken of all the stenographers and office clerks it might be easily shown that they are treated with the same pollteness which it is the custom of every American man to show toward a woman, whether in his employ or not. The truest politeness and chivalry are not always clothed in the most polished exterior. It does not always take fine clothes and a mind filled with the small things of life to make a most polished exterior. It does not always take fine clothes and a mind filled with the small things of life to make a true gentleman.

As the control of society has passed out of the hands of the few who had the leisure to devote to the cultivation of ceremonial, and as in this country there is no stigma on being "in trade," manners are not a necessary adjunct to social success. They have not, however, been neglected; in a certain way they are more important now than they have ever been in the past, because those who have sprung from the ranks and achieved wealth quickly, without having either birth or breeding at the start, are anxious to acquire a seeming familiarity with the customs and usages of polite society, and to be recognized as being on an equality with those possessing them. Thus upon careful investigation one comes to the conclusion that as a race the American people are just as careful of their manners as they have ever been, but that as we have grown older as a nation and farther from the customs which our ancestors brought from monarchial countries the ceremonial fashioned after court practices has fallen into disuse.
