The two young men were weary and footsore and the road was steep. The pale one dropped under a tree and closed his eyes "it's no use, Florio, You'd better give it up."

'Idiot!" returned the other, a big blonde fellow with a soft voice-sat down, hugged his knees and scowled. Presently he exclaimed: "Chardo' You're not going to play me the shabby trick of fainting again' "Not if I can help it," Richard re-

"As we've stormed the others," Richard said bitterly. "Not at all. Quite otherwise. This town will be squeezed." He opened and closed his hands significantly.

and closed his hands significantly. "We've been, up to this present, too virtuous. Virtue is not filling. Nor does it make for respectability. Look at our clothes. I shall now take to the road. 'Put money in thy purse.' "Tve no conception what you mean, Florio," the other returned wearily. "Nor I. That is, I have created the gigantic outlines, but not yet the fine details. I advise you to pull your hat over your eyes and take a nap. It will cost us nothing. Anyhow, don't worry. Things are going to be all right. I'll be back soon. at the start, but soon with lagging feet and a perplexed countenance, "Oh, Lord," he groaned, "whet my wits, or I cannot keen Chardo's soul and body together, and when you are driven into a corner it's no use splitting hairs. I told them the truth," he reflected resentfully, "and nobody be-lieved or cared. Old fools that pretend to know everything beforehand, and are always sighting and scenting something rotten! Dolts that imagine themselves shrewd because they invite dis appointment and fatten on suspicion! I tell them honestly who my father was and what I know and can do and want, and what sort of fellow Richard is, and what a heroic light made. The sleek ones with full bellies smile. It sounds rather improbable, they say. The art-professors are very sorry. Of course, in their position, and sorry. Of course, in their position, and so on and so forth, they have a good many such applications. Besides— didn't I want to punch that smirk!— if a man has genuine talent he is sure to make his mark somehow sooner or later. Then out stalks my lord Richard, as haughty as a hidalgo with a patch in his trousers. The commercial nabobs make still shorter work of me, and no newspaper needs a stevedore

"Improbable? Of course it is improbable. The truth mostly is, deuce take it! I don't know as I'd believe it nyself, if my stomach would sit down; and be mannerly. All the same two young felows of fair education with no crimes on their conscience, no disgrace in their families, and through no fault of their own, are nearly famon the outskirts of this rich

"Well, town, if truth is too good for you, I'll give you some ornamental lyimpudence and socospocus vou can swallow, and take without prejudice whatever the Lord sends in my way."

A carriage was slowly passing the cross-road on the brow of the hill where he stopped an instant. The chub-by hand of a child seated by the coach-man negligently dangled a large Bretzel. The vagabond at the horses heads denly uttered a prolonged and terrific yell, which by straining a point might be considered a Jobel, but rather resembled the howl of a demon in anguish. The horses started, the child screamed, swayed and dropped the Bretzel, three women simultaneously comforted the victim, expostulated with the miscreant, and gave orders to the irate coachman who threatened with his long whip.

But these futile demonstrations receded with the brisk trot of the startled horses, and Florio in gleeful possession

And I claim that my great thoughts need succulent food, and a lot of it, washed down with foaming beer. 'I hold it true, whate'er befail." a gnawing stomach writes billous verse."

"Florio, I'll come along with you now, It's more cheerful and I feel better."

"No. no! Wait a bit. You're too tired. Let me go foraging alone once more. I have considerable business to transact before night. Judging by the cuckoo, which has just struck sixteen. t must now be about two o'clock by my watch at the pawnbroker's in Co-logne."

Again Florio climbed the hill.
"Upon my word, I could devour not only the Bretzel, but the fat child on the box. Hermes, god of rogues, guide my yearning stemach. I don't know whether I can write a comedy, but I believe I can perform a large-sized one, solo. I feel all sorts of latent inhorses, and Florio in gleeful possession of the plunder retraced his steps down hill.

"Oh, gammon!"
"Upon my word I did," Florio sured him, with a candid air. "Chil-dren drop such things sometimes, don't they?" Richard broke off half and proffered

"Oh, I ate mine coming down the hill," Florio said, picking up a twig and chewing it, while hugging his knees and keeping his eyes fixed like a dog's on his friend, until he had consumed the last morsel and leaned back against the tree with a little sigh.

Bristling with determination, he knocked. (To Be Continued.)

Death's face is not a pleasant thing to look upon, yet thousands of men and women go about daily with the reflection of death in their faces. The dull eyes, the sallow complexion, the sunken checks, the emaciated form, all tell the story of the insidious advances of that implacable foeconsumption. Doctors have declared that consumption is incurable. It is not. Thousands of consumptives have testified to their complete recovery after they were given up by the doctors and all hope was gone. It is simply a matter of going to the seat of the trouble which is imperfect and improper nutrition.

H. Gaddis, Esq., of No. 313 S. J. Street, Tacoma, Washington, writes: "I was taken iil in 1882 with headache and pain in my back. I called in a doctor and be came three times. He said I was bilious, but I kept getting worse. I took a cough so that I could not sleep only by being propped in bed. My lungs hurt me, and I got so poor that I was skin and bone. I thought I was going to die. I saw the 'Golden Medical Discovery' recommended for a cough. I tried a bottle of it and it did me so much good that I tried another one and it made me sound and well, so I recommend it to everybody. It saved my life."
