BIG FIGHT FOR THE LEHIGH RIVER

Scranton Gas and Water Company Declared the Wisser.

JUDGE J. B. M'PHERSON'S OPINION

He Denies the Right of the Lehigh Coal and Navagation Company to the Ownership of the River and Permits the Local Water Company This City as Well as the Water

The Scranton Gas and Water com-pany was yesterday declared the win-ner of the famous suit brought against ner of the ramous said origin against it by the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company and others to restrain it from using the waters of the Lehigh river. The decision was made by Judge J. B. McPherson, of Dauphin county, who McPherson, of Dauphin county, who was specially called to preside in the case. He dismissed the preliminary injunction but allowed the bills to stand to protect the plaintiffs in case the defendant does not live up to its plans as laid down in its answer to the injunction proceedings. The opinion which accompanied the decision covers twenty-seven closely type written pages and is a most important and interesting document as it deals with an altogether new point of law and reviews the bitter of early legislation on water the history of early legislation on water ways, and riparian and navigation rights and particularly the history of the Lehigh company since its incep-tion in 1805. Owing to the local import-ance which attaches to it, the opinion will be printed substantially in full in an early issue of The Tribune. In order to provide against the possi-bility of a drought in this city, the Scranton Gas and Water company con-ceived and adopted the idea of availing itself of the use of the waters of the upper Lehigh. To do this it secured riparian rights by quietly purchasing land along the banks of the river near Gouldsboro and proceeded to erect works for diverting the Lehigh water to the water shed of Roaring Brook. The plans comprised a reservoir to offence the water shed of Roaring Brook. catch and store the surplus water dura pumping station and pipe line to car-ry the water over a divide of less than a mile to the headquarters of the Roaring Brook. It was proposed to use this water only in cases of necessity, the present supply of the Gas and Water company sufficing for all purposes under ordinary circumstances.

AN INJUNCTION OBTAINED. In January last just as the work was gotten under way the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company, the Bethlehem South Gas and Water company and Samuel Wallace and others instituted proceedings to restrain the Scranton company from carrying out its purposes, the plaintiffs alleging that the supply of water in the river was meagre enough without any of it being divert-ed, and the Lehigh Coal and Navigaed, and the Lenigh Coal and Naviga-tion company particularly averring that no one had a right to use the Lehigh water without its permission, the legislature having, it claimed, given it full simple right to the entire river from source to mouth, together with all its tributaries.

The case was first taken to Wayne county, but the court there ruled it had county, but the court there ruled it had no jurisdiction. Then the Lehigh people agreed to have the issue tried here providing a foreign judge should be called in. This the Scranton company acceded to and in January the hearing took place, Judge McPherson being called to specially preside.

The plaintiff's side of the case was used strenuously by such able coursel.

sellor, General, W. E. Doster, of South Bethlehem. Hon. Alfred Hand and W. J. Hand and Hon. H. A. Knapp repre-sented the Scranton Gas and Water

The importance of the case was widely commented upon at the time, in-volving as it did the general determin-ation of the rights of riparian owners, as well as a determination of the rights of the Scranton Gas and Water com-pany under its charter, and of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company under the several acts of assembly granting it special powers and rights in the river Lehigh, which legislation covers a period of ninety-three years.

PLAINTIFF'S CONTENTION. The contention of the plaintiffs was that the Gas and Water company had no right whatever as a riparian owner. no right whatever as a riparian owner, to diver the water of the river or any part of it to any other water shed. They also contended that the charter of the Scranton Gas and Water company, through granting the right of eminent domain, did not give it the power to take water from the Lehigh river as that particular stream, virtually as if it had been a piece of real estate, had been given by the legislature to the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company, and that no one could take from them their franchise in this respect, without an express enactment of the legislature.

The Gas and Water company in its answer disclaimed any Intention of diminishing the ordinary flow of the stream and averred that it was simply their purpose to store the surplus wa ter in time of floods, which would oth-erwise go to waste, and to pump the water so stored into the Roaring brook or another storage reservoir, all of which it contended it was entitled to do under is acquired riparian rights and the right of eminent domain granted it by its charter and acts of assem-

Judge McPherson, in his opinion, states that the issue presents a new point of law, never before decided in this state or in any of the cases brought to his notice. The new point is the to his notice. The new point is the right of a riparian owner in respect to the diverting of water to another water shed, when such diversion does not diminish the ordinary flow of the stream. The contention of the plainting that it had a right to do this, he says, is well founded. The legislature having empowered the Scranton Gas and Water company "to take water from any stream," gave it the right to take water from the Lehigh under certain limitations, as to quantity and interference with the rights of the other.

He decreed against the claim of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company that it owned the entire "corpus" of that it owned the entire "corpus" of the stream and further based his re-fusal on the grounds that no apprecia-ble damage could result to the others invested with rights in the stream from the use which the Scranton Gas and Water company proposed to make

The Gas and Water company asked a favorable decision and kept on with the work on the pumping state and pipe line and with the completion of the reservoir will be ready to supply Scranton with an almost limitiess amount of water.
