SYNOPSIS.

Charlie Esdale, superintendent of police in the Tamil district, India, a man learned in the ways and subtleties of native malfactors...

PART V.

He walked away from the circle with his head down, and without another glance at the five men around the fire...

and to spend a week or so with him. He was a famous man in the old war time, they say, but he is old now...

He turned back at the words and complied. Certainly this strange old man, with his wild schemes, had the power of drawing other men to him...

For once, then, Esdale's knowledge was at fault. His investigations led always to blind alleys; nor, during the months he was at Tamil, did his police officers forward him, as desired, news of the return of Wajid Ali to Hammam...

Esdale dressed wonderingly, too taken up with the thought of the night's experience to take much heed even of such an event as five hours' healthy sleep was to him.

After breakfast, he rode out along the line to see if he could find the point at which he had diverged.

No district in America presents, during the winter season, so many varied attractions as the state of Florida.

"The boy jumped up and saluted. 'I am the son of the watchman, protector of the poor. I will tell my father that your honor waits.'"
