Miss Frowen had been educated at Girton. She had taken a high place in the Classical Tripos, and was understood on Etruscan Sarcophagl. She wore as a brooch a gold Green coin of Demetrius Poliocetes, and had Tanagen figurines for ornaments on her

Frem all this you may be tempted to suppose that Miss Frewen was severe, middle-aged and unpleasing; perhaps even that she adorned herself with a pair of blue spectacles. If so, you are mistaken. We have changed all that, The first generation of Girton girls, it is frue—the pioneers of a Movement— had a tendency to be pallid, emaciated and book-wormy. But Cirton nowadays has found its level. It has become an institution. To go there no longer implies intensity. Miss Frewen was twenty-five, good looking, plump, round faced and rosy, Moreover, she had a twinkle in the corner of her eye which distinctly suggested the pos-session of a sense of humor. It is a popplar error to imagine that any incongroity exists between a sense of humor and Etruscan sarcophagi. I am given to understand by those who have had the privilege of looking over Miss Prewen's proofs that here will be by far the most amusing book ever written about the cometeries of Etruria, Dennis and Muller and Canon Isaac Taylor am credibly informed, are quite dry in comparison. For raciness and lerve you must go to Miss Frewen.
"Yes, indeed," the landlady of the little Welsh lodgings in the out-of-theway port made answer to Miss Frewen's inquiries. "They're fery nice rooms. A fery goot view, and fery quiet and pleasant. Only, will Miss Frewen be coming alone?" She inquired it anxfously, with the usual Welsh politeness of the third person; and she looked, as she spoke, into Miss Frewen's face with a vague sense of hesitation.

Miss Frewen's eyes twinkled. "Oh, yes," she answered. "Alone, I'm quite used to it, Mrs. Griffith. I always live alone and travel alone. I call myself a

Mrs. Griffith drew back. "But . . * ther is a young gentleman in the house," she went on, anxious to guard the proprieties, "An Oxford young gentleman, A fellow off a college." Miss Frewen smiled. "Poor young man," she answered. He needn't be afraid of me, I'll do nothing to hurt

The landlady looked surprised. Recollect, 'twas in a remote corner of Wild Wales, where people have not yet learnt how the world is turning. At Stow-inthe-Wold or Burnham-on-the-Crouch, now, nobody would have been surprised: but at Llanthangel-vn-Morfen. the Emancipated Woman was an unknown phenomene

However, it was impossible to look once at Miss Frewen-fresh, brisk, seifreliant-and to doubt her "respectability." The landlady gave it up, and let her rooms to the Girton girl.

Miss Frewen (I do not feel sufficiently at home with her myself to warrant me in calling her by her Christian name, Monica)-Miss Frewen settled down in the easy chair by the window at once having dispatched a stipendiary boy to the station to fetch her portmanteau She traveled with a portmanteau alone eing a tailor-made young lady. Ther she looked out on the sea and the great stacks of rock, very rough and ragged Brenkers were rolling in from the open Atlantic. The white foam lashed itself tate showers of spray round those sharp granite fangs. Fresh sea breezes moved Miss Frewen's fair locks, which, strange as you may think it, were not smooth and neatly plaited, but blew in loose chestnut wisps about her cheeks and

"It's rather a bother, though, this Oxford man," she thought to herself, with a passing shade, "I came down here to be quiet. I wanted to finish the part of 'Etruscan Sarcophagi,' relating to the Earliest Hellenic Imitations. didn't want to be bothered with what they call society. Still, it may be as well, perhaps, to have an Oxford man me. I wonder if he's classical? If so. I might get him to revise first proofs for me. A second eye is always useful. Miss Frewen laid down her proofs with marked austerity, "Now, Mr. Peshe said, "you know I came out here to look over these slips. I asked you not to come with me. You begged to be allowed, and promised me you wouldn't interrupt me if I let you follow. I'm unaccustomed to being followed-I can't bear dogs and thingsbut I foolishly consented. And then you keep on asking me stupid questions. For St. Monica, see the Bollandists, or Alban Butler's 'Lives of the Saints, sub voce. She was the mother of St. Augustine, and no doubh in her time an estimable and amiable, though narrowminded woman, But why a modern English girl can't be christened Monica without her name exciting curious inquiry, readily resolved by reference to any encyclonedia, basses my comprehension. Farmer Thomas Discovers a New Kind of Food for Cows -- Saw and Gist Mill Burned.

Special to The Tribune.

Susquehanna, February 23,-Farmer Thomas, of Great Bend, had quite an experience with is cattle. His stock of hay ran out, and, being unable to get more in time, he gave the cows some of the leaves he had collected for the edding, and he was surprised to see that they appeared to enjoy them. The caves went so well that he concluded t while, and in fact, leaves were the only thing that the six cows and two torses lived on for a month or more. While enting hay the cows had given twelve quarts of milk weekly, yielding five bounds of butter. After being put on diet of leaves the quantity and quality of the milk increased until gave fifteen quarts of milk, yielding seven bounds of butter, Mr. Thomas regrets that he didn't sell all of his hay last fall and fill his barn with leaves.

AN ELECTRIC MAN. William Goldthwnite, of Brookdale this county, is a remarkable freak. Three years ago, during a storm, he was engaged in cutting tan bark, when a tree from which he was taking it was struck by lightning.
