BARRARISM'S TWIN RELICS.

From the Washington Post. The Federal courts, in various decision The Federal courts, in various decisions, have placed their emphatic condemnation on the boycott, declaring it to be an unlawful conspiracy. The public's sense of justice indorses these decisions. But the blacklisting of men who have committed no unlawful act is just as reprehensible as the boycott. We do not know how extensively this thing has been carried on. Evidence on that point is conficient, it is probable that reports of fligting. It is probable that reports of fleting. It is probable that reports of theting. It is probable that reports of wholesale blacklisting are exaggeration. Be that as it may, however, the wron should be stopped. If it be a cruel our rage for thousands of working men-combine to break down a man's business and drive him into bankruptcy, it is no less cruel for the employing corporation to combine to deny a man a chance tearn his bread. We have tramps an paupers enough without forcing men wh want to work to take to the road, and sending their children to the poorhouse.
